Reduced to a skeleton by disease, and Restored to Health with Dr. Pardee's Remedy.

Wilson, Niagara Co., N. Y.

GENTLEMEN:—In April, 1883, I was prostrated with a severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism and was confined to my bed four months. I was attended by the best medical skill, but rapidly grew worse until I was reduced to a mere skeleton.

The disease had gone to my heart and to the region of my heart and I was finally given up by the physicians, who said I could live but a few hours at most and that all they could do was to make me as easy as possible by killing the pain by frequent injections of morphine. I was finally advised by a friend to take Dr. Pardee's Rheumatic Remedy. Upon being asked as to giving it to me, the physician said "I have no faith in patent medicines, but give it to him; it will not hurt him."

I was then so near dead that my limbs [illegible]

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has largely benefitted the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower, and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen, has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, and the German Syrup for Cough and Lung troubles, have perhaps the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted, in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10 cents remain the same size

FULTON, OSWEGO COUNTY, N. Y., WEDNESDAY MARCH 23, 1887.

"[illegible] Spring."

[illegible] the [illegible] is drawing near a focus,
And the [illegible] and the blizzard will trade places in the bog;
And the crocus and the locust will begin their hocus-pocus,
And the gentle goddess Ceres will be lying round incog.
Soon again the prurient poets, both facetious and factitious,
Will assail spring's specious splendor with their "rotten-rot" most rude;
Soon again the giddy gusher will assume an air most vicious,
And again by her enchantment every dude will be subdued.
Soon bluff boreas, so bitter, will give birds a show to twitter,
And the lambs will take occasion, as girls often do, to skip,
And the soda fountain fellows, in their sleeves will with style titter,
As we ante up our nickels for the festive fix and "flip."
Soon again the weary merchant will lay off a day for fishing,
And with grub, grog and tackle will set forth at dawn of day;
But in spite of all his efforts, and his almost witching wishing,
He will only carry homeward what the jug first took away.

Sweet spring! I dearly love you, and you cannot be too vernal;
Excuse that strange expression, but it tells you "to a T"
What I wish, indeed most truly, that your stay could be eternal,
I would gladly be your poet if you wished me thus to be.
I'd be proud and pleased to tell you very often of your beauty,
All your graces and your glories in my sweetest strains I'd sing;
I would put my vernal verses far above all other duty,
And no other bard should call you anything but "gentle spring."

The Fairy's Gift.

"I wish my fairy would come to-day
And brush the dust from these rooms away;

"The cobwebs, too, on the ceiling high,
Empty traps with never a fly—

"How horrid they look! upon my life,
The torment of every tidy wife!

"I wish my fairy my place would take
In the kitchen, and let me see her bake,

"For I'm so weary I really dread
The thought of kneading a batch of bread."

Her husband heard her wish that day,
But scarcely heeding it hurried away.

At night he locked his office door,
And gladly entered his home once more.

As round the cosy room he glanced
His eyes with pleasure fairly danced.

The fire-dogs of polished brass,
For burnished almost gold would pass,

His easy chair was in its place—
Beside it beamed a smiling face.

No wonder that he turned to her,
Half husband and half worshiper,

And said; "Some fairy has had full sway
In every nook of our house to-day."

Forgotten were dust and cobwebs high,
And there was a light in somebody's eye;

For the heaviest tasks that burden a wife
Grow light when they brighten another's life.

ANDERSONVILLE.

A Description of the Prison Site as it Appears To-Day.

It will be remembered that the site of the prison was a couple of side hills sloping gently down toward each other into a bog or swamp, through which ran a sluggish stream of water eight or ten feet wide and about six inches deep. When this spot was chosen for a prison it was quite heavily timbered with pine trees. A space of about twenty acres in extent was cleared off and securely fenced in with the timber thus obtained, the timber being cut twenty-five feet long and buried five feet in the ground. The soil was light and sandy. Only two trees were left in the entire enclosure. No place could have been more inhospitable and cheerless. The swamp in which a man would sink to the waist, occupied a considerable portion of the field: the little stream was brackish and unpalatable; the absence of shade trees which might have been left, made the pen almost like a caldron under the burning southern sun.

To-day the spot presents a somewhat pleasanter aspect. The side hills are now farmed, the swamp is not and will not be for years, until redeemed by a more careful system of agriculture. After the prison was abandoned in April, 1865, the place grew up with second growth timber, but this has been almost entirely cleared away, and in its place in the proper season are found the staple products of Georgia husbandry. The great, towering stockade has almost entirely disappeared; it is only here and there that a single post or a little group of posts is to be seen. These have not rotted away, but have been wisely split up into rails to fence off the farm land. Their purpose is not now to keep in prisoners but to keep out intruders.

Still, though the heavy, spiked timbers have been removed, the three lines of stockade can be distinctly traced; they are likely to be discernable for years to come. The strong earthworks that the Confederate soldiers threw up are still there, hard and firm; and the rifle pits used by them are still traceable, though twenty-three years have elapsed since they were dug.

The sluggish little stream, the "Branch," as the prisoners called it, still takes its [illegible] what was the old [illegible] third of the way from [illegible] boundary of the stockade, [illegible] as it was in the 60's. [illegible] turn to get a drink of fresh water. It was the one great blessing of the pen, and it has never ceased to flow. Its waters bubble forth to-day as fresh and sparkling as in those times of suffering. The appearance of the spring, of course, is changed. Twenty years of ceaseless flowing has worked it back a little higher up the hill, since the old barrel which the prisoners sunk soon disappeared after the prison was abandoned. It is now some twenty feet from the perceptible outline of the stockade. For a time it was protected by a large pine stump, but it is now surrounded by a neat wood curbing about two feet and a half high, with a semi circular opening on the lower side, through which the water constantly flows.

Before the spring broke forth the prisoners endeavored to find fresh water by sinking wells in the hillsides, but to no avail. Many such excavations were made, some of them forty or fifty feet deep. Several of these are still to be seen, almost as perfect as when the prisoners dug them. They are all dry, since whatever water runs into them from the surface is rapidly absorbed by the sandy soil. They are a constant source of danger, yet the careless husbandry of the south does not fill them up.

Of course the "dead line," a low fence eighteen feet from the stockade, made by nailing a fourth-inch strip of board on low posts about twenty feet apart has wholly disappeared. Not the slightest trace is left of it, since it was lightly constructed.

Though more than twenty years have passed, the burrows or dugouts of the prisoners are still discernible. It is strange what grotesque humor will crop out in the midst of suffering. It seems as though there is a law by which humor asserts itself as a protest against despair from the very depths of a suffering heart. Those dugouts—mere kennels—were the boys' "brown stone fronts." The hillsides, especially on the north slope, are the places deeply corrugated. Great washouts are to be seen where the prisoners' burrows have caved in. It will take a long time for the influence of weather and shiftless farming to obliterate them. Here and there, also, is to be seen a narrow, long depression in the ground leading toward the stockade. These are caused by the falling in of the earth over the prisoners' tunnels, which were excavated with a view to escape. And escape some 350 of them did. Periodically the Confederates would drive a heavily loaded wagon over the space betwen the stockade and the dead line with a view to breaking in the soil and discovering the tunnels. Besides this, they probed the ground with sharp spikes for the same purpose. These little lines of indenture there are eloquent with the hopes and efforts that too often were unavailing.

Relics of prison life are constantly being exhumed—bits of pots and kettles, knives, spoons, canteen covers, and the like. These are mostly found on the sandy slopes of the hills, since the soil of the marsh has scarcely been disturbed. Upon the whole, the place has the air of a peaceful rural district. One would readily see that it had been the scene of war operations. But there is nothing to suggest the horrors of thirteen months of prison experience except to one who can rightly read and interpret the little signs we have pointed out above.—Chicago Times.

THE PROPER THING.

Music racks are in the shape of a lyre of a size considerably bigger than that ancient musical instrument.

Modern architecture calls for mantelpieces at least fifteen feet high in the town or country "house-beautiful."

Too many rugs, robes and footstools in the fashionable drawing-room keep the awkward continually stumbling.

Outer garments are very short, and are all in visite style, that is to say with the sleeves forming part of the back.

Long garments are reserved for traveling and for rainy weather. Mantles and capes with or without hoods are short.

Huge butterflies, both of gauze and gold-powdered gauzes, are again used upon summer bonnets by leading milliners.

Spring trousers are not to have the "dude crease" front and back down the legs, because the thin material will not admit of it.

The fact is stated to be positive that the spring bonnet will be small, and not strikingly different in style or "get up" from the feminine headgear now fashionable.

RETRIBUTION.

BY "THE DUCHESS."

CHAPTER XIII.

Mr. Duran's house in Berkeley square is presided over by his aunt—a little, thin, wiry, kindly old lady, with corkscrew ringlets and a high peaky nose. Her acquaintances are as old-fashioned as her curls, but it is amazing how many she has of them. They are of the staid, eminently respectable order, all able to count their generations, and all "carriage people." Yet it might be admitted that sometimes Miss Duran pines for the young and frivolous, and would be glad to welcome them inside her nephew's doors—her doors, as they might be called, so little does he interfere with her arrangements, and so seldom does he show himself between 12 a. m. and 11 p. m.

On this particular Wednesday quite a stir and bustle of the thick silken skirts take place, as Gerald Massareene, smiling and gay, enters Miss Duran's drawing room. There is, in spite of the debonair manner that distinguishes him, and induces all these old young men to look askance at him, and grow green with envy, and that causes the quite old men to wink and nudge each other, and call him "a sad dog"—a suspicion of anxiety that renders his kind eyes melancholy, and makes him a favorite at once with all the gentle, elderly women.

He is a fashionable looking young man, exquisitely dressed, and is, in fact, such a departure from Miss Duran's drawing room, that he creates an immense sensation, that is only to be surpassed by the entrance of a lovely young woman ten minutes afterward, who sweeps up to Miss Duran with the most charming smile in the world on her beautiful face.

"Dear Miss Duran," she says, slipping her little gray clad hand into that of the astonished spinster, "we have been wanting to come and see you for such a time —auntie and I—but there have been so many other tiresome engagements. And, after all, it is better, is it not, to leave the best to the last?" this with a swift glance at Massareene that sets his heart a-beating. "Even now, we could not come together; there was some absurd crush somewhere, and we had promised to go, so I told auntie I wanted to see you even more than she did; so I packed her off to her afternoon and I came to mine."

Her low trainante voice, her pretty smile, the gentle pressure of the little hand, all won Miss Duran's heart at once. She had met Millicent two or three times, but now she persuades herself that they have been good friends for many years. What a lovely creature! How nice of her to come to this dull old house just to see a stupid old maid! Dear, dear me, there were not many who would do that!

Meantime the "lovely creature" is taking her tea from Gerald Massareene's hands. Tea of an exquisite flavor and rich with country cream, sent up specially from the heart of Hampshire for Miss Duran's Wednesdays. Tea served in priceless old Crown Derby, before which the modern imitations might hold down their heads.

"Sugar?" asks Gerald in a society tone; and then, considerably lower, "my own darling!"

"Eh?" says Miss Grey in return to this impassioned address, with a startling promptitude that is rather dispiriting.

In truth, having got here, no matter how, and so acknowledged to Massareene that she has thought it worth her while to give up for his sake one of the most brilliant concerns of the season, she is a little frightened, a little impatient and yet a good deal glad.

"Millicent," says Gerald, dropping into the chair near her, "that you have come at all is so much more than I dared hope for that I would now entreat you to let my joy continue by being kind to me for the short hour we may be together."

His tone is very sad, in spite of the joy he mentions. Old Miss Duran, looking kindly at the two young people who have descended into her midst and cast such a cloud of sunshine upon the dull, stately drawing room, reads as clearly as though it were all in print before her that this young man—the son of her dead cousin—is breaking his heart for love of the pretty, slender girl staring so solemnly into her tea cup, and that the pretty girl is not altogether indifferent about it.

"Bless me! And I hear she is to be married to that nephew of Lucy Brand's. Well, to judge by her face, I should say her heart is not in it. Poor young things! Evidently they have entered into the blissful realms of love. Cupid's darts have found a lodging in their tender breasts!" Sometimes Miss Duran, in spite of the ringlets, indulged in flights of poetic fancy. "How romantic! How full of pathos! That dear boy!—why, I can see him dwindling away before my eyes. Quite a wreck he is becoming, though art and his tailor may try to delude me. Well, I must see what can be done. Gerald, my dear, do you think Miss Grey would like to see that painting of your great-grandfather that adorns the west wall of the library? It is well worth a visit, I assure you, my dear Miss Grey. Do let Gerald persuade you to look at it. A masterpiece, I assure you. One of Lely's brightest efforts!"

"Come!" says Gerald, in a low entreating tone.

Millicent hesitates for a moment, and then, according to custom, is lost.

She rises, gives her cup to him to lay upon a table near, and with a bright smile and glance directed to her hostess follows him out of the room.

Although his spirits have risen almost beyond his control, Mr. Massareene behaves himself wonderfully until the hall is crossed and the library gained. Then, I regret to say, he considerably forgets himself. He throws honor to the winds, and taking Granit Boyle's fiancee in his arms, strains her to his heart.

"Darling of my heart!" whispers he, with a sigh of passionate gladness.

At Miss Grey's conduct on this occasion I am also bound to express regret. Instead of the indignation she should have shown, she simply pushes him away from her with a very lenient hand, and laughs a little.

"Was there ever such a bad boy!" says she, standing back from him with palm extended to keep him off. "Are you totally without grace?"

"On the contrary, I am filled with it! I have gained—you."

"Gerald!"

"Millicent, will you tell me now that I am nothing to you?"

"Certainly [illegible] you [illegible] I hope [illegible]

[illegible]

At this half admission Mr. Massareene's hope rises fortyfold.

"If you dared—what then?" he asks, kneeling beside her and possessing himself of one dainty hand.

"I might—learn—what happiness really means."

"With me, you mean?"

"Oh, Gerald!" whispers she; and then it is all over, and she is caught to his breast, and for a little while the world is forgotten by both.

Being the woman, she is the first to awake from the happy dream.

"It is madness!" she says lifting her head and gazing at him with tearful eyes.

"Not if you will trust to me. Not if you are sure of that you honestly love me. Speak to me, Millicent! Why do you turn your head away? You do love me!"

At this she lets her gaze return to his.

"I wish I had never seen you," she says with trembling lips.

"That is a hard speech, my darling!"

"It is true, though. If I had never seen you, I might have been willing to conclude this contract with Granit. If I had never seen you, I could never have"——

"Go on."

"Loved you!"

She bows her head upon her hands and bursts into fresh tears.

Mr. Massareene draws her head down upon his shoulder.

"Don't cry like that, Millicent," says he. "It will all come right in the end. Something tells me so." Something tells him quite the reverse; but he would not be the true lover he is if he could not strain a point to please his beloved. "What we have got to do now is to think what is the first, best step to be taken."

"The first, best step will mean ruin."

There is a touch of impatience in her tone. Although she loves him, it is hard for her to give up the gilded loaves and fishes of fashionable life.

"It will not," retorts he stoutly; "it will mean emancipation—if you have the pluck to go through with it."

"Oh! emancipation!" says she disdainfully, though she is glad of his resoluteness. "All you Irishmen are mad about freedom! One would think you were a land leaguer the way you speak! I wonder you are not afraid to love one of the hated Sassenachs."

"I am not afraid of anything except your strength of mind. You are mine now, but will you be mine an hour hence?"

"If I were a man," says Miss Grey reflectively, "I should not choose to fall in love with a woman upon whom I could place no dependence."

"If I were a woman," responds he promptly, "I should know better than to marry one man when I loved another."

"Well, but you are not a woman," says she triumphantly.

"Neither are you a man," replies he. "That squares our accounts. Sweetheart," regarding her very gravely, "tell me at least that you will think seriously of my proposal."

"I am always thinking of it," returns she, sighing. "Oh! why are not you Granit."

"The gods forbid!" says he piously. "I am a better man as I stand, though no doubt a poorer one. Well, however the wind blows, I am a happier fellow to-day than I ever expecetd to be. I have heard from your own lips that you love me."

"Do not place too much confidence in that."

"You will not deny the truth of it, however?"

"No. It is true. You are more to me, Gerald, than any man I ever have met—than any man I ever shall meet."

Her eyes grow large and dim with tears. She holds out her hand to him.

"Strengthened by such an assurance, I will believe in nothing less than victory," replies he, in a clear, resonant voice, his face bright with a hope that at this moment has grown into a certainty.

Millicent, watching him, feels her heart grow sad. "Will not the weight of circumstances, of custom, prove too strong for him?

"I must go home," she says, starting a little.

"Good by then for the present, darling," whispers he proudly. He draws her to him and looks down anxiously into her face. A question seems hovering on his lips. At last he gives it words. "Do—do you ever kiss him?" asks he in a jerky, vehement way that speaks of suppressed agony.

"Never!" returns she almost as vehemently.

She flushes crimson. Massareene's arms tighten round her, and an expression of unspeakable relief alters his face.

"I cannot tell you how often I have thought of that, how it has preyed upon me," he exclaims eagerly. "And after all, the torment I endured had no foundation." He looks tenderly down upon her. "My love, you seem more mine now than ever!" Then his tone changes, and an accent of scorn unmitigated runs through it. Evidently his thoughts are wandering to some one absent. "What sort of a fellow was he at all?" says he, with a curl of his lips.

A faint smile breaks through the sadness of Millicent's face.

"Would you have had him different then?" she asks, with a slight return of her usual gayety.

"Different! Do you know," says he presently, "that I don't think I dislike him now half as much as I did five minutes ago?" Then pressing his cheek to hers, and speaking in a much lower tone, and rather shyly, "Millicent, will you be kinder to me than you are to him?"

"Have I not been kinder!" asks she, faintly.

"But kinder—kinder still!"

She lifts her face to his!

The Stewart and [illegible]

I do not think that anybody who has disputed a will within a good many years has had the sympathy that follows Prescott Hall Butler in his protest against the will of his aunt, the late Mrs. A. T. Stewart. Mr. Butler claims undue influence on the part of Judge Hilton, and I don't think he will have any difficulty in substantiating his claim. Mrs. Stewart died leaving an estate worth some twenty millions. About five millions of this she divided among her sisters, her nephews and nieces, and her grandnephews and nieces. The other fifteen millions she hands over to Judge Hilton to do with it as he thinks best. It is supposed to be a trust fund, but he is given unlimited control, and is told to use his own discretion as to whether he would do anything with the money except use it for his own purposes. Undoubtedly A. T. Stewart had great confidence in Judge Hilton, and Mrs. A. T. Stewart shared that confidence; but I think that Judge Hilton must have feared that Mrs. Stewart's faith in him was not on the firmest foundation, or he would not have hedged her about with spies as he did. I know from some ofther nephews and nieces that they never could see their aunt alone; that, if they called upon her and managed to see her at all, some of the Hilton family were sitting in the room to look after her, and to see that they did not get too intimate with her. Mrs. Stewart was a silly old woman, who even a less clever man than Judge Hilton might have got entirely under his influence. He knew all her weaknesses, and he played upon them. Judge Hilton is a lawyer, and so is his son-in-law, Judge Horace Russell. But even lawyers over-reach themselves sometimes; and the best lawyers in this city are of the opinion that Mr. Butler has a very strong case. I think that when the contest comes into the courts there will be some startling disclosures, and it will be discovered that Mrs. Stewart was little more than a prisoner in her own house. If Mrs. Stewart had been a woman of clear mind and good, practical business sense, and if she had insisted upon the same freedom to make or unmake friendships that other women have and if, after due consideration, she had concluded to leave the bulk of her estate to her friend, Judge Hilton, I do not know that Mr. Butler would have a very strong case. The nephews of Mr. Tilden were left over $900,000, and they want to break his will to get more money. Mow, I think they are wrong. Mr. Tilden, when he made his will, was in full possession of his faculties. He was a lawyer, a man of the world, and there was no undue influence brought to bear upon him, and he left no more than was necessary for the purpose for which he designed it. Mrs. Stewart, on the contrary, leaves fifteen millions to the discretion of one man, and, as I said before, she was not in position to act with perfect freedom. The Stewart will contest is going to be a lively one. There will be a hard fight on both sides. As I said at the beginning of this paragraph, public sympathy is with Mr. Butler. I never knew a man who had fewer admirers, outside the immediate Stewart family, than Judge Hilton, and everybody will be delighted if the will is overthrown and Mrs. Stewart's natural heirs get her fortune.—Cor. Boston Gazette.

Always Be Prompt.

Half the value of anything to be done consist in doing it promptly.

And yet a large class of persons are always in advance of them, and so it is with their appointments and engagements.

They are late very likely, in rising in the morning and also in going to bed at night; late at their meals; late at the counting-house or office, late at their appointments with others.

Their letters are sent to the post office just as the mail is leaving it. They come into the station just as the train is going out.

They do not entirely forget or omit engagement of duty, but they are always behind time, and so generally in haste, or rather in a hurry, as if they had been a little too late, and forever were trying to catch up with the lost time.

They waste time for themselves and waste it for others, and fail of the comfort and and success which they might have found in systematic and habitual punctuality.

A good old lady was asked why she was always so early in her seat in the church, is said to have replied that it was her religion not to disturb the religion of others.

And if it were with all a part, both of courtesy and duty, not to say religion, never to be unpunctual, they would save much vexation of spirit.—Young People.

All Styles Suit Her.

At the State dinner Mrs. Clevelend took a "new departure" the Style of dressing her hair, and the change was very becoming. Her hair was rolled up from the nape of her neck to the top of her head and puffed as it was worn in the early part of this century. A high Spanish comb was stuck slantingly toward the left side of her head, and the effect was very beautiful. Her rich robe of crimson plush, with tucker and sleeve caps of point duchesse lace, threw out in strong relief her fair complexion, large, expressive gray eyes, nut-brown hair and round, white throat. Although Mrs. Cleveland does not appear to care for ornaments, yet she always wears at her husband's entertainments the diamond necklace whice was his wedding gift. Her ears have never been pierced, so that she does not wear ear rings. From the fact that Mrs. Cleveland says that she never feels tired after shaking hands with thousands of people for two or more hours, many have observed how unusually large and strong her wrists are, as though they were made for the uses they are put to. From the elbow to the hands, Mrs. Clevelann's arms are large. Her hands are a good size and well shaped. She probably wears 6½ gloves. She is fully 5 feet 7 or 8 inches in height, and well proportioned. She has a lofty graceful bearing which is natural and unstudied. Her mold and style is of the kind that improves with age, and merges the girl into a grand woman who never fades or becomes unattractive.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Standard wishes to correct a false impression in reference to the "firing" of the editor's wife and mother-in-law from the Methodist Church. They were not put out of the building by the pastor as some suppose, but merely had their names erased from the roll of membership. The editor is not the kind of a man to quietly submit to having his wife and her mother "fired" bodily from a church or elsewhere. Gentlemen—About three years ago my little grandchild (now nearly five years of age) was stricken with Eczema. Beginning in a mild form he slowly but surely became worse until his life was despaired of. Six months ago he had scrofulus looking sores, characteristic of Eczema, completely covering his face and body, effecting his hands to such an extent that his finger nails came off. Such was his alarming condition that it left me little hope of his recovery. I, as a last extremity, resorted to all the remedies advertised as good for Eczema, not only that, have consulted many physicians, including some weeks treatment at the Oswego Hospital. JAS. R. FAIRGRIEVE - EDITOR

For some weeks past we have urged our citizens to liberate the village board from political party ties. We have presented our views candidly and are thoroughly convinced that a very large majority of the electors of Fulton are strongly in favor of a citizen ticket. What is needed is some one to act as a leader and direct the movement: some one to call the citizens together to nominate a ticket, some head or organizer. The sentiment that local affairs should be free from politics, prevails. Will any one man or number of men open the way for this sentiment to be voiced? Where is the man to step forward now and put this movement on foot and direct it? Citizens individually seem afraid to step forward and put their hand to the wheel. Each one seems to shrink from the work because he feels unequal to it or fears the jeers of men who stand by party at whatever cost or because men will say he has a pet scheme on foot or because they will call him renegade or will lose customers who are politians or because of very many reasons which each man reasons out for himself.

All these things may be expected by anyone who starts the movement. The same fears and dislikes have kept numbers of good citizens from party caucuses and have thus permitted cliques to have their way and has caused the need for a rooting out of the system of a strictly Democratic or Republican administration in village affairs. Our province is to voice public sentiment for one thing and another is to present our own ideas upon public and local questions for your consideration. This we have endeavored to do. Public sentiment is, as we state it, in favor of a citizen's ticket, and for ourselves we strongly favor such a ticket. This state of public opinion and our own ideas we have heretofore presented to you. Further than this, we should not go. It would be unbecoming on our part, to visit electors, get them to call mettings, put tickets in the field and enter a canvass as a worker. This would be trying to force our ideas upon the public and would be going beyond our duty. We do not know of one good citizen who does not believe that a board of trustees and president chosen from our best people, elected by the people regardless of party, would be of much greater benefit to Fulton, than a board elected by a particular party and bound to stand by that party. When the acts of a partisan board become so "rank" as not to be endured, then the people will elect a people's ticket. But that a citizen's ticket at any time is much safer and better, there is no doubt or question. Will you or any one of you citizens step forward and crystallize this public sentiment. The feeling is abroad that this spring is a good time to make the change. Organization and energy will [illegible] nominate and elect a citizen's ticket. Do you or any of you feel [illegible] of an unfettered board of trustees [illegible] enough to give the movement active aid and lead it to a [illegible] issue?

I recommend the following amounts to be raised for general and special purposes for the ensuing year:

ORDINARY EXPENSES.

For Lighting Streets,	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]

[illegible] and [illegible] sessions.

They are from all parts of the country, and of all sizes, ages, and descriptions, from the delicately dressed dude to the coarsely clad, thorough going rough business man. Many of the prominent, widely known railroad men, a sufficient number by whom to identify the organization, while some of the old faces were missing. The President gave them a special reception in the East Room and each member was individually introduced to him.

The large convention held by the leading educators of the country was to be sound at the National Museum. Probably no visitors who could come to Washington deserve a warmer welcome than the superintendents and teachers of the public schools. Many of them prodded Congress vigorously for its neglect of educational matters, and especially for its responsibility in the defeat of the Blair bill.

President Young, in reply to the address of welcome by the Commissioner of Education (Mr. Webb) said that Washington was rapidly becoming America's educational Mecca. Referring to the Bureau of Education he mentioned that it was inaugurated by a bill introduced into Congress by Gen. Garfield more than twenty years ago. Its work has been a good one, but there was much yet to be done, as there were now over six millions of our people who could neither read nor write. He said the inspiration of Congress seemed to be millions for defense but not one cent for education, and that the people would see that the three leaders in the last Congress who were instrumental in smothering the Blair bill, should remain at home after the next election.

It has been decided that the contemplated carnival which was to have been held here at the conclusion of the great National Drill in May, shall be postponed until October. The reason for the change is that there would not be sufficient time between now and the time of the Drill to make the preparations necessary to carry it out on the magnificent scale proposed. October, however, will be a delightful month for such a display. It is probable that the New Orleans Mardi Gras material will figure in the procession.

Indications point to a grand Drill here during the month of flowers. The total number of military organizations which have up to this time made arrangements with regard to entry and transportation is 226. These are divided among thirty-six different States. They comprise one brigade, nine regiments, sixteen battalions and 145 companies of infantry; one battalion, fifteen light batteries and five machine-gun platoons in artillery; six cavalry companies, seven zouaves, thirteen corps school cadets, five regimental bands and three drum corps. One of the important occasions of the Drill will be Governor's Day, when the chief magistrates of the different States represented will review the troops.

The headless Treasury Department still remains intact, but before this reaches you a new Secretary may be named. The last of Secretary Manning's belongings have been taken from the building, and although both he and Treasurer Jordan are crossing the Atlantic, their resignations were not to take effect nor the vacancies to occur until the first of April. Many officials of the Department with whom this period of suspense has dragged, hope that Mr. Fairchild, the Assistant Secretary, will be the new Cabinet officer.

[illegible] Lady [illegible] of modern London, with glimpses of Wm. Black, Herbert Spencer, Gilbert, George Eliot, Carlyle, Ruskin, George Boughton, etc., etc. An anonymous author contributes a bright and amusing sketch, "My Lady's Maid," which she assures the reader is drawn from life. Will Carleton's "Experiences of a Public Lecturer" is an entertaining bit of autobiography, and will be eagerly perused by all the poet's admirers. "Social Life at Princeton," by E. M. Hopkins, of the class of '88, is the first of a series of articles which are to describe the inner life of students at our principal colleges, and are to be written by students themselves. The poetry is excellent. Margaret J. Preston contributes a stirring American ballad, "A Mystery of Croatan." Bessie Chandler has "A Spring Song," and Philip Bourke Marston has a posthumous poem, "My Grave," which is of unusual pathos and interest, in view of the fact that it was one of the very last things he wrote, and apppears to have been written in the expectation of death.

St. Nicholas.

April St. Nicholas closes VOL. XIV. of this popular Magazine for Young Folks. The table of contents includes a large variety of interesting reading mater for both old and young, considerable space is given in this number to a new operetta by E. S. Brooks entitled "The Children's Crusade". General Badeau tells the story once again of the naval engagement between the Monitor and the Merrimac, it is freely illustrated and the vivid pictures greatly interest young people.

ATLANTIC MONTHLY.

The April Atlantic has for a frontispiece an etching of Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, a most charming picture of this grand man. Few of the early readers of the Atlantic will fail to place this sweet face among their choicest treasures, while present readers of "Our Hundred Days in Europe" from the pen of this delightful writer will often recur to this beautiful etching. The April number fully sustains its reputation of being among the foremost magazines of the day.

Trade Dollars.

Speculation in trade dollars is about to take its profits. Over $3,000,000 worth were offered at the sub-treasury in New York on the first day of redemption, and only $110,000 of this sum could be handled. At that rate it would take about a month to redeem the offerings of the first day. Some of these coins have been held for several years, three or four at the very least, or ever since the plan of redemption was first agitated, But as they were then bought some where in the neighborhood of 60 cents, they will pay a fair interest to those who have held them.

The whole temper of the meeting seemed in line with the remarks of Hon. D. H. Lockwood and many others. The former in his remarks said he supposed that this question had gone beyond the stage of discussion. He had supposed that the men who put up the wires should come here and propose to put them down as quick as they could. This meeting should pass a resolution ordering the cables down within twenty-four hours, and that the fire department be instructed to cut them down at the expense of the people who put them there. There was no right to put these cables up. On Monday a cable was put up before the Richmond, and to-day they were stretching the same cable again. If these cables could be cut in half a minute why had not these instruments been given to the fire department?

The remains found in the ruins Saturday have been identified fully as those of Hiram Benedict, Jr., of Lockport. Katie Wolf is the second victim from that city. The remains of Henry B. Rumsey have been forwarded to Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Max Dahlman of Rochester died at 8 o'clock Saturday night at the Tifft house, whither he was removed in an ambulance after sustaining severe internal injuries in jumping from the fourth floor of the burning building to the roof of St. James hall. He was badly burned about the face and hands, but it was thought he would recover. He was surrounded at his death by his family, his wife and little daughter, who arrived here Friday evening, and relatives and friends of this city. Dahlman was about 37 years old, was wholesale jobber and dealer in woolens, doing business in Rochester, and was formerly a traveler for Dahlman, Spiegel & Weil in this city.

There are other missing men reported, and telegrams and letters are continually received from people who fear that their friends and relatives may have been in the building. Those not accounted for at present writing, who are most likely to have been at the hotel, are as follows:

Capt. W. H. Cabot of Boston, who told a friend in Cleveland, O., where he was stopping, he was coming to Buffalo Thursday and would stop at The Richmond. He left Cleveland Thursday noon for this city.

A salesman for the Normandie Shirt Company of New York, named Goldsmith, who was a guest at The Richmond the night before and has not been heard of since.

A man named Perry, whose brother was in the city looking for him Saturday.

President Richmond of the Buffalo Library has given orders that the search for the bodies shall be continued until it is believed all are found, and then Contractor Berrick will raze the walls and remove the debris from the site of the old Y. M. A. Building.

Mr. J. B. Acker, the traveling coal agent of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western railroad who was reported as missing, has turned up. When he left his home in Scranton, Pa., he sent word to Buffalo that he would stop at the Richmond, and his mail was forwarded to that hotel. He arrived in this city the night before the fire, but decided to put up at the Mansion house, as that is nearer to the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western station, where he intended to take an early train in the morning. In the morning he heard of the fire and went up to look at the ruins. The Delaware, Lackawanna & Western officials in this city, believing that he had stopped at the Richmond, naturally became anxious to his safety. Telegrams to his home and to the different intervening stations along the line failed to reveal his whereabouts and for a time it was feared he was lost. His father at Scranton was preparing to take a train for this city when a telegram was sent him stating that his son had reported to the officials at the station here in the afternoon.

The list of mortality does not end with those who immediately met their death in the flames. There are still in the hospitals and at their homes a round half dozen whose conditions are serious, if not critical. Some will escape with only scarred faces, twisted fingers and amputated limbs; all will have occasion, if, indeed, they survive, to remember that night of horror to the end of their lives.

Recapitulation shows five deaths, four missing, who are doubtless dead; one dying, and half a dozen others lying in a very critical condition; four others missing who may be among the dead.

Thousands of people yesterday crowded against the ropes which fenced them off from too close approach to the ruins of the Richmond hotel and the streets leading to the place were thronged with people throughout the day. Nearly a hundred men were at work moving the bricks and debris to the streets.

Advertisers, with more zeal than discretion, have hastened to take advantage of the curiosity of citizens and at one place, as if in very mockery of death and its tomb, the proprietors of a place of amusement, advertise an attraction for to-night, and at another place a caterer proclaims the merits of his fried oysters.

There was a wonderful demand for the Sunday papers yesterday and most of the city papers run their presses until late in the day.

Steam Heat on N. Y. Central Trains.

NEW YORK, March 19.—The superintendent of motive power of the New York Central railroad reports that the experiments which have been carried on for heating cars by steam have been successful during the weather of the past week, though no opportunity has yet been offered for testing the system in extreme cold weather. The train experimented with consisted of five passenger-cars. The connection between cars was made by brass telescopes and ball and socket joint. Steam is used directly from the locomotive boiler, through a pressure-reducing valve, the strain on the pipes being five pounds to the square inch. The system is known as Martin's invention and will be adopted if it tests well in extreme cold weather.

A Cure for Consumption.

PHILADELPHIA, March 19.—Dr. T. N. McLaughlin, physician-in-chief of the Philadelphia hospital, reports marvelous success in treating consumptive patients by the lately discovered French system of rectal injections of a preparation of carbonic acid gas, all other medicine being abandoned. Of thirty patients in the last stages of consumption all have greatly improved under this treatment and to all appearance are rapidly recovering their health. Dr. McLaughlin believes a complete cure for consumption has been found.

THE INVESTIGATION.

BUSSEY'S BRIDGE REPORTED SAFE AND SOUND A MONTH AGO.

No Defects in Construction Ever Discovered—Thoroughly Tested Under the Weight of Two Locomotives—The Accident Not the Fault of the Bridge—No Solution to the Mystery.

BOSTON, March 19.—The railroad commissioners yesterday morning resumed the hearing in regard to the Bussey bridge disaster. Three witnesses were sworn. Edward Lang, chief car-inspector of the Providence railroad since 1855, testified that two men, under his supervision, inspected the Dedham branch cars after each trip. He described the method of examination, and said that the axle is likely to break where it cannot be seen. He depends more upon looking at the wheels than striking them as being more sure. The cars upon the wrecked train were as good as any cars on the road.

George F. Folsom, superintendent of construction, testified that he had had the care of bridges for the last twenty-five years. Every part of the bridges are examined by sight and sound, principally by himself. Bussey bridge was last examined in the middle of February when everything was found correct; some nuts had been taken off, but these were replaced with others. This bridge is of peculiar construction, the peculiarity being its many pieces. It is a combination of trusses. The first iron truss was designed for 2,000 pounds per lineal foot and it being light the second truss was made heavier and the first one was given extra security; the first truss was originally put in in 1871 or 1872 and the second one in 1876; the first iron truss, built by the National Bridge Company, was, according to Mr. Hewins, not quite up to the standard of what was required for the place; it had been in use for four or five years, but it was sufficient when placed over in the other position where it would receive only one-quarter of the weight. The bridge was tested under the weight of two locomotives and no fault was found with the method of construction. Little repairing has been done and no defects of construction were ever discovered. He never found any fault with the bridge believing it to be thoroughly made in every particular.

He had found but one thread stripped from a nut on a small rod that was put in rather for facility in erecting the bridge than for actual use, but he did not consider it of enough importance to repair. Except at the end blocks the bridge is all wrought iron. The support of the floor beams depended principally upon the stirrup irons, and these stirrup irons were in such a position that they could not be inspected. The guard planks were three inches thick and ten wide. Ties are now put only four inches apart so that in case of derailment wheels can run over them. That would probably have been done with this bridge had it been changed. The road was originally built for double tracks. The embankment where the second track would go in is somewhat lower. It never was filled up, because it never was used. It may be two feet below the level of the roadbed where the track is, that is on both ends of the bridge.

Edmund H. Hewins of Boston, the builder of the west truss in 1876, testified that he was in business for himself, although hoping to form a company he adopted the name "Metropolitan Bridge Company," but it was never formed. He was educated at the Lawrence scientific school, Cambridge, studying there in 1862 and 1863, then going with the Detroit Bridge and Iron Works designing bridges. He designed the drawbridge of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad over the Mississippi river and several others on that line, and on the Illinois Central road, and some on his own account elsewhere. The Bussey bridge was the last he built, and since then he had been engaged as a "consulting engineer. The main tension bars of the Bussey bridge were made by the Phœnix (Pa.) Iron Works; the balance of the work was made by the Trenton (N. J.) Iron Company from his designs. The bridge was peculiar. The "skew" being sharp at an angle of 21 degrees, the center of the truss being about even with the end on the opposite side. He then described the dimensions technically. It was intended to carry 3,000 pounds to each lineal foot and was fully capable of that strain and allowances were made for even greater. The work was done in conformity with the specifications and was tested by two locomotives and tenders still, and moving at speed. He thought the greatest deflection 6-10 of an inch. A skew bridge was more bother to build than a straight one and costs more but is no more dangerous. The corner blocks were of cast iron. The broken one was as good for service to-day as it ever was. Bridge builders do not always inspect every piece of iron that is put into their work, though they may some of it. There are inspectors for that duty. The Phœnix company, one of the largest in the country, followed that plan. No inspection of the Bussey bridge was made on behalf of the company that he knew of. He (Hewins) inspected it as much as any bridge that he had built. He was about the work often while it was in progress and generally supervised it. No tests were made of parts except by examination. The hangers were in such positions that they could be only partially examined. That method of construction was common so far as he had observed. He considered it a correct form of construction. He supposed that all builders exposed all parts of a bridge that they could where it was necessary, in fact it was desirable to expose everything possible where it would not interfere with more important requirements. He consulted with George Folsom before determining the specifications. The only test made was at the finish. The loops were made in accordance with others that had stood repeated satisfactory tests though those shown had not been tested.

Mr. Hewins was asked for his opinion of the cause of the accident and said that in general he believed it was either a derailment or breakage of some part of the rolling stock.

Annual Conference of the M. E. Church.

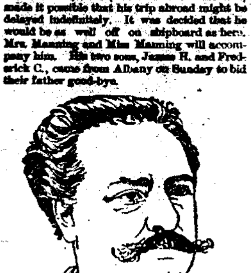
SAILED FOR EUROPE.

Statement that Mr. Manning is to Try Carlsbad and its Waters.

NEW YORK, March 15.—Secretary Manning and Treasurer Jordan sailed for Europe to-day on the Arizona. Mr. Manning has had a severe cold, which, with his other afflictions, made it possible that his trip abroad might be delayed indefinitely. It was decided that he would be as well off on shipboard as here. Mrs. Manning and Miss Manning will accompany him. His two sons, James H. and Frederick C., came from Albany on Sunday to bid their father good-bye.



Mr. Manning's condition is considered precarious by his friends. Persons who have been with him recently say that his utterance has become indistinct and that his mind wanders at times in a painful manner. He will go to London for a short time after his arrival abroad and then to France. He will try Carlsbad and its waters.

THOROUGHBRED FANCIERS.

Second Annual Meeting of the Holstein-Friesian Cattle Association of America.

BUFFALO, March 17.—The second annual meeting of the Holstein-Friesian Cattle Association of America was called to order in parlor A at the Genesee at 11 o'clock yesterday morning by President F. C. Stevens of Attica, N. Y. Fully 100 members answered the roll-call, and a more intelligent body of men would be hard to find. Erie county is represented by Messrs. Henry C. Jewett, A. P. Wright of this city, Hon. B. Chaffee of Springville and Taylor Bros. of Collins. Among the representative breeders present from a distance are Messrs. G. D. Wheeler, Deposit, N. Y.; William M. Singerly, Philadelphia; M. L. Sweet, Grand Rapids, Mich.; David H. Burrell, Little Falls, N. Y.; W. C. Brayton, Syracuse, N. Y.; W. Judson Smith, Syracuse, N. Y.; F. L. Houghton, Putney, Vt.; Edgar Huidekoper, Meadville, Pa.; Gerrit S. Miller, Peterboro, N. Y.; C. W. Horr, Wellington, O.; C. R. Payne, Hamilton, N. Y.; Thomas B. Wales, Jr., Iowa City, Ia., and many others.

No important business was transacted at the forenoon session, except the annual report of the secretary and treasurer. The latter has $27,000 in his hands, which shows that the association is in a splendid financial standing. The principal feature of the annual session will be an effort to change the method of cattle registration. The meeting will be continued to-day. The association has a membership of over 300, and is one of the most important organizations of the kind in the country.

Strange Verdict from a Coroner's Jury.

BRADFORD, Pa., March 19.—Jan. 12 last E. C. Vosburg came to this city from Warren, Pa. After visiting several saloons and Chinese opium dens Vosburg became boisterous and noisy and was arrested and placed in the city lockup by Officer Trucks, where he was found lying dead upon the floor the next morning. The coroner's jury found that Vosburg came to his death by the "visitation of God." Rumors of rough handling by Officer Trucks were rife, but after the coroner's inquest were apparently dropped. Friday Officer Trucks was arrested and bound over to court on a charge of manslaughter preferred by W. A. Hall, an uncle of the deceased. It is said that the prosecution have since the death of Vosburg had detectives constantly shadowing Trucks and every other person who was supposed to be in the least conversant with the affair. Vosburg belonged to one of the most prominent and wealthy families in Warren county, was a graduate of Yale college, and prior to his death was a law student in the office of Secretary of State C. W. Stone.

The Pennsylvania Legislature.

HARRISBURG, Pa., March 19.—In the house yesterday Representative Woodward of Center, offered a resolution for the appointment of a committee to visit Bellefonte, Center county, and inquire into the expediency and benefit of erecting a new capitol building at that place. The resolution was tabled.

It is evident the Standard people do not intend to allow the Billingsley bill to pass the house without a struggle. When the bill passed second reading Thursday the producers were in high glee, but yesterday the Standard people were in the same elated state and claim that on Tuesday next they will have the bill withdrawn from the house, or should they fail in this, that they will defeat it on third reading. Mr. Billingsley still claims that he will get his bill through, notwithstanding the boasts of the Standard people.

The argument in the great trunk line and coal pool cases, which was to have been heard yesterday, was again postponed until Friday, the 25th inst., owing to the illness and enforced absence of some of the eminent counsel.

Narrow Escape From a Disaster.

BUFFALO, March 14.—Fire broke out in the Courier company's buildings shortly after 6 o'clock last evening, and only hard and persistent exertions on the part of the fire department saved that large establishment from complete destruction. The fire was first discovered in the waste paper in the basement and immediately spread with great rapidity. Three alarms were rung in and only after a fierce fight of two hours was the fire extinguished. Loss from $10,000 to $15,000, mostly by water; fully insured. During the fire Thomas Purcell, a member of Chemical No. 2, fell from a roof, a distance of about fifteen feet, and was seriously injured.

SUPPLY AND DEMAND.

UNFAVORABLE EFFECT OF INTER-STATE COMMERCE ON BUSINESS.

Uncertainty in Certain Circles as to the Exact Meaning of the Law—Anxiously Awaiting the Appointment of Commissioners—Redemption of Trade Dollars Not Up To Expectations.

NEW YORK, March 19.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: It is becoming more generally realized that the interstate commerce bill is for the time affecting business unfavorably. In some branches, as in the movement of dry goods to the west, a temporary flurry of greater activity results from the desire to transport before the coming change of rates. But in other trades the uncertainty as to future rates produces almost a paralysis, which is rendered more serious in the iron business by the question whether railway building and repairing may not be checked. Many look vaguely for a better understanding of the act when commissioners are announced, but the commissioners will have to await decisions of many courts before they can know what powers they have. Hence it can hardly be hoped that uncertainty regarding the effects of the act will be soon removed.

Probably the great Baltimore & Ohio negotiation which causes hesitation in the stock market, results from the passage of this act. Mr. Sully does not seem to have succeeded, but it is generally believed that some important consolidation of interests may be effected which may have important influence on the future value of securities. Other events have rather favored prices on the whole. European purchases are again of some magnitude, and the danger of monetary pressure this spring seems less, unless it should come through determined effort of individuals, but the state of bank reserves renders such an operation entirely possible. Foreign exchange has declined; lower prices of products help to make exports large, and the Bank of England gains rapidly in specie.

Wheat declined about 3 cents, but it is now recovering; corn has fallen about 1½ cents, oil has remained without important change, and lard has declined nearly half a cent; cotton on the contrary has advanced to 0 cents, with large exports, but it is thought speculative holders have embraced the opportunity to unload. Wheat exports for the first half of March have been about 5,700,000 bushels, including flour, but with 72,000,000 bushels surplus from the last year's crop, the stock in excess of this year's home demand, and 104,000,000 bushels already exported, still is more than 90,000,000 bushels. An advance in wheat rates from Mindeapolis to Chicago, by the northwestern pool, instead of 7½ cents, threatens to affect Chicago markets.

It is now definitely settled that wool, instead of advancing with foreign prices, has been forced down by the dullness in goods. Stocks on hand are ample and there is no fear of a short clip, but growers still hold expectations of higher prices. No change is noted in woolen goods. Distribution of cottons is more active as the change in freight rates draws near, but prices are only firm, and print cloths decline a shade. A better feeling is noted in boots and shoes, many producers being pressed to meet March delivery, and the Massachusetts shops steadily increase their supply of labor. India rubber advances, with sales of Para at 81 cents; the demand for goods is excellent in New England, but less satisfactory at the West.

Another bond call is promised but will hardly affect the money market, as only $3,000,000 bonds have been offered under the open calls. Redemption of trade-dollars, thus far $904,983, is far below expectations, indicating that current estimates were exaggerated. Silver receipts at New York rise to 13 per cent. of total custom house receipts, but the government has taken in $1,700,000 gold and put out $2,200,000 silver certificates during the past week. The demand for money is active but the supply adequate at Chicago and St. Louis. Rulings of the new bank examiner occasion some irritation, as a number of the banks report less than the required ratio of reserves. It is presumed, however, that the change in the policy of the department will not be so hasty as to create any disturbance.

Business failures for the United State 187, Canada 23—total 220, as against 282 last week.

The President's Semi-Centennial.

WASHINGTON, March 19.—President Cleveland was 50 years old Friday. He celebrated the event mainly by attending to public business. Early in the day he received a number of handsome floral tributes accompanied by congratulations. In the afternoon an unusually large crowd called at the mansion and kept him away from work for an hour. A large party of Buffalo excursionists were among the visitors and some of them, personal acquaintances of both the president and his wife, were presented to Mrs. Cleveland. Everybody who called wished the chief magistrate a happy birthday and many happy returns. Only three presidents before Mr. Cleveland have had the pleasure of celebrating their semi-centennials while in that office. There were James K. Polk, Franklin Pierce and Gen. Grant. James A. Garfield would have been 50 years old had Guiteau's bullet been a month later in concluding its fatal work. President Cleveland has the advantage in years of many of his predecessors. Washington was 57 when he was inaugurated; John Adams 62, Jefferson, Madison and John Quincy Adams 58, Monroe 59, Jackson 62, Van Buren 55 and Harrison 68. Gen. Grant when he first entered the White House was the youngest and Harrison the oldest of the presidents.

Dillon's Speech in the House of Commons.

LONDON, March 19.—In the house of commons last evening Mr. John Dillon earnestly protested against the arrest of Father Keller upon the specious charge that he, acting as trustee of the tenants of the Ponsonby estate, was guilty of conspiracy.

Mr. Arthur J. Balfour, chief secretary for Ireland, denounced Mr. Dillon's language as violent and inflammatory and arraigned him for partisanship of the most short-sighted character in accusing the Irish police of misleading the magistrate upon whose warrant Father Keller was arrested, and of goading the people to resistance of the law. The national league agitators, he said, were really responsible for the existing disorder and disregard of law by goading the people into rebellion.

A division being taken on the first rule of procedure, the closure rule, it was adopted by a vote of 262 to 41.

Mr. Michael Davitt, who is now in London, will leave for Scotland on Monday, where he will deliver speeches in advocacy of his land nationalization theory during next week.

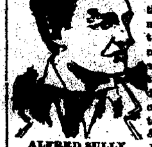
BALTIMORE & OHIO.

The Sully Negotiations Fallen Through and Other Parties Dealing.

NEW YORK, March 21.—There is no doubt that the option held by Mr. Sully for the Richmond Terminal Company has expired and that another deal has been consummated for control of the Baltimore & Ohio railway.

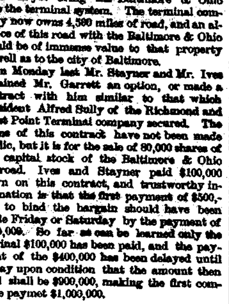
President Alfred Sully in speaking of the matter said:



ALFRED SULLY.

"Yes, I see that other parties claim to have purchased the control of Baltimore & Ohio, I think they have made a deposit on account. When the terminal company decided not to exercise their option, I told the Baltimore & Ohio people that while we unanimously desired to combine our terminal property with the Baltimore & Ohio, yet we could not ask them to consider themselves in any way bound to leave the matter open. I think time will yet bring the Baltimore & Ohio into the terminal system. The terminal company now owns 4,590 miles of road, and an alliance of this road with the Baltimore & Ohio would be of immense value to that property as well as to the city of Baltimore.

On Monday last Mr. Stayner and Mr. Ives obtained Mr. Garrett an option, or made a contract with him similar to that which President Alfred Sully of the Richmond and West Point Terminal company secured. The terms of this contract have not been made public, but it is for the sale of 80,000 shares of the capital stock of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad. Ives and Stayner paid $100,000 down on this contract, and trustworthy information is that the first payment of $500,000 to bind the bargain should have been made Friday or Saturday by the payment of $400,000. So far as can be learned only the original $100,000 has been paid, and the payment of the $400,000 has been delayed until to-day upon condition that the amount then paid shall be $900,000, making the first complete paymet $1,000,000.



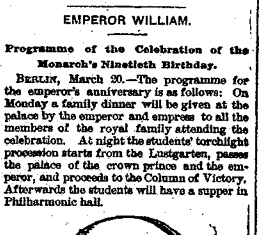
ROBERT GARRETT.

President Garrett is represented as anxious to dispose of the Baltimore & Ohio property because thawrted in his long cherised plan to gain entrance to New York. There is some confirmation of the belief that the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe road are also parties in attempting to deal with Mr. Garrett.

EMPEROR WILLIAM.

Programme of the Celebration of the Monarch's Ninetieth Birthday.

BERLIN, March 20.—The programme for the emperor's anniversary is as follows: On Monday a family dinner will be given at the palace by the emperor and empress to all the members of the royal family attending the celebration. At night the students' torchlight procession starts from the Lustgarten, passes the palace of the crown prince and the emperor, and proceeds to the Column of Victory. Afterwards the students will have a supper in Philharmonic hall.



EMPEROR WILLIAM.

On Tuesday morning the emperor will receive the congratulations of the members of the royal families and the foreign ambassadors. He will dine at the palace of the crown prince, and afterwards hold a general evening reception in the white saloon, retiring the instant any symptom is exhibited of his strength being overtaxed. The pupils of all the schools will march on Tuesday to the churches, where special prayers of praise will be offered. The municipal authorities will go in state to St. Nicholas Church and a banquet will be given at the Town Hall. At night all the public buildings and many private houses will be illuminated.

On Wednesday last the crown prince gave a reception which was followed by tableaux vivants and a concert. A special performance was given at the opera-house every night during the celebration.

The emperor was in capital health and high spirits. At the dinner on Monday last covers were laid for eighty-five guests. Most of the visiting royalists resided at the royal castle and their suites at hotels. The prince of Wales, Prince and Princess Christian, the grand duke of Hesse and Princess Irene stopped at the palace of the crown prince.

Last Evening's Concert.

The curtain rang up last evening before a large and select audience, including a number from Oswego, who had come up in a special car to hear Miss Clara Louise Kellogg. This was her first appearance in this village and was the first time that many present had been able to hear this celebrated artiste. While the support given by Messrs. Spigaroli and Greco and Miss Carrie Morse was of a high and exceedingly interesting character, it was evivdent that all were eager to see the prima donna. Her first appearance on the stage was the signal for loud and continuous applause and while rendering Faust's beautiful "Jewel Song" she held the large audience spellbound. In response to the encore, she again favored the audience. After rendering the second song on the program, "I Love Thee," Miss Kellogg electrified those present with the familiar but ever-welcome [illegible] "Swanee River" sung in a manner that was never before heard in this [illegible]. The fourth act of Verdi's Grand Opera in full costumes was presented according to the program as the second part of the entertainment. The [illegible] created by the company [illegible] that remained in the rendering [illegible]. While the Leonora of Miss [illegible] was far beyond any[illegible] been seen and [illegible] years that we [illegible] comparison.

[illegible] is one of the [illegible] this great city. [illegible] the District Attorney [illegible] on the same evidence [illegible] stripes on Jaehne, McQuade and O'Neil. The story of evidence is the same. Fullgraff and Duffy prove the existence of a deal to sell out the aldermanic honor for $20,000 each; Katie Mels to show the meeting at McLaughlin's house; the officials of the Common Council to make manifest that Cleary was a duly elected Alderman; a newspaper reporter who happened, unknown to the members of the famous "combine," to be present when the Broadway franchise was passed over the Mayor's veto in the secret session on the pleasant summer morning in August, and Waite jolly, fleshy, Charley Waite, a States evidence Alderman, to fill up and amplify any link in the chain of evidence not sufficiently strong. The story is old enough; but what attracts attention is the dramatis personae of the defense. Here they are:

Ira Shafer, the leading counsel, shrewd sharp, a buldozer of witnesses and a blustering, judge-provoking lawyer, sometimes courteous, generally rough, uncouth, disrespectful to the prosecution, to the judge, if he dared to be, and absolutely devoid of good breeding to the witness. That's the attraction. The didos of Mr. Shafer. His vocabulary of words, while the District Attorney is examining, contains two words "I object" which he utters in so many different ways that one is compelled to the conclusion that Mr. Shafer should have chosen some other calling where his historical abilities would be more appreciated.

Then there is Daniel Docherty, the Nestor of the Philadelphia bar. It's but little he says, but in manner he is the opposite of Shafer. Quiet, watchful, thoughtful. Full of suggestions to his associates. His sole business here is to sum up for the defense and endeavor to move the practical minds of the jury by his eloquence.

But Judge Barrett is a character. He is the model judge of the age. A pleasant appearing man with full beard, intellectual face, silent, thoughtful, a cold, unsympathetic, reserved, dignified judge. Full of law and possessed of a fine judicial mind, he is careful to say just enough to meet the demands of the question the answer of which decides so much.

There are no liberties to be taken with Judge Barrett. There are no squabbles before him. John Graham and Ira Shafer are the two most persistent violators of the dignities of the Court, but Judge Barrett has succeeded as no other judge in bringing even them to a resemblance of respectable conduct. There is a peculiarity with Judge Barrett. The more angry he becomes by the persistant hectoring and badinage of counsel, the more coldly polite is he in his manner. For an instance of this: It happened one day last week the judge remarked when jurymen were hard to obtain that one needed to coax men to become jurymen.

The preemptory challenges of the defense were exhausted and one of the defendants counsel made this remark on the basis of an affidavit to show that jurymen could not be obtained and applied to another justice for a change of venue. This justice who by the way, was Judge Paterson, sent the papers to Judge Barrett. It was a sight worth seeing to watch Judge Barrett while reading these papers. Of course this move by Cleary's lawyers was done to obtain a delay. The judge gave the defense a piece of his mind that made Cleary's counsel look sick and sad. It shows the extremes to which the boodlemen are put in order to avert the end which must come.

Poor Cleary. How red his face is and how extremely agitated he is. There he sits close up to Lawyer Docherty, looks hopefully at his array of counsel and drums on the table continuously. It is a sad position for the Alderman. He has protested his innocence more strongly than any of them, hence the trying position he is now occupying.

The stranger who comes to this city from the ceremonial and exacting society of the continent, will be struck with the freedom with which the American woman comports herself. I was talking the other day with a friend who is on a visit to this country from England and that was what surprised him. He saw how the American girl visited theatres and balls, dined at hotels and restaurants and did all sorts of things without a chaperon, and this was a matter of absolute surprise. The fact is that almost any time of the day you go into Delmonico's and the chances are you will see a gay party of young ladies lunching. It may be they have been shopping and are just resting from their fatigue. It is customary and nobody thinks it strange except persons who, like my European friend, have never heard of any such thing. They go to the theatres whole parties of them attended only by a gentleman or two and the little supper [illegible] is not considered [illegible] can't get a seat in Delmonico's [illegible] hour after the theatres close.

I said a gentleman [illegible] with these theatre parties of ladies. That reminds me of a little incident told me the other day. The lady in question was a Boston girl, and if you want unadulterated cheek, you want to go to Boston for it. Albany girls [illegible]

[illegible] Mayor Grace was as [illegible] a man as this city had. To-day, well he has his friends. The cause you know? Just the signing of a recommendation, certifying to the good character(?) of "Fatty" Walsh and desiring his appointment to the Wardenship of the Tombs. How are the mighty fallen! But Ex-Mayor Grace has attained his ends. As mayor of this great city his commercial enterprises in South America would be more securely advanced than if he were a private citizen. They have so advanced and there is strong probability that with the exercise of that financial ability the Grace brothers have heretofore shown, the time is not very far distant when they will rival the Vanderbilts in wealth.

Politics after all are the substantial aids of ones business, and it sometimes, nay often, happens that money spent in political assessments comes back again in increased professional and business prosperity. Nevertheless, no one deplores the effect of the large political assessments more than

WANDERER.

To the Taxable Inhabitants of the Village of Fulton.

Believing that the meeting called by the trustees for the 24 inst. to vote upon the proposition to raise $1,700 to furnish water for fire and other purposes for the present year is in direct violation of the spirit if not the very letter of the following provision of the village charter, vis;

§ 14. Before any tax for a special purpose, or to increase the amount for the ordinary expenses of the village for the current year, can be voted, notice thereof must be published, for at least two weeks next before such meeting, in all the newspapers published weekly, or oftener in said village subscribed by the president and a majority of the trustees, stating that the meeting will be called upon to vote for a special tax, or to increase the ordinary expenses of the village, specifying the object, stating the sum proposed to be raised and an estimate by items of the whole cost of the proposed object. A resolution to raise money by special tax can embrace but one special purpose, and must be voted upon separately. But no resolution authorizing such tax, can be adopted within three month next preceding the time appointed for the next annual meeting, except it be to pay a lawful judgement recovered against the village. A resolution to raise money by by tax for a special purpose, or which necessarily requires a special tax for its accomplishment, adopted in violation of this section, is void,

Therefore, we have given the matter no attention and shall make no effort directly or indirectly to have the proposition carried.

Goodjon's Boots and [illegible] are all fresh and clean.

A correspondent to the [illegible] News states that a number of enterprising farmers of that locality have invested quite largely in German barley paying $10 per bushel. At the recent meeting of the Farmer's Institute at Oswego it was decided that "Bohemian Oats" and "German Barley" were swindles and the less farmers had to do with them the better.

The big sale of Boots and Shoes is in full blast at Goodjon's.

About [illegible]

[illegible] a communication from Mr. Alfred Egerton of Albany, the landscape gardener who had drawn up a plan at the request of the association. The following were some of the suggestions, accompanying the sketch, that the communication contained. A desire to remove as far as possible the formality of the original laying out of the walks. Reducing the width of the main walks to 10 feet and at the same time increasing the lawn areas. At the junction of the main path two beds are designed to be planted with color and not flower producing plants. An eight foot walk placed upon the Buffalo street side, a six foot walk on the Academy street side and a six foot walk from Park street to the central portion of the square. Six beds of of shrubbery are shown and a few evergreens introduced to break up the dead monotony of the ground in winter. The band house can be preserved and one good electric light placed in the park was suggested as an important thing. A large number of trees on the outside lines of 4th, 3rd and Buffalo streets should be removed in order to allow the grass and other trees their share of light and air. The plot at the junction of Academy and 3d streets should be kept for croquet and lawn tennis.

Mr. Egerton sums up by sayang 1st. Cut out and remove trees marked in sketch. 2d. Lay out the walks as shown. 3d. Plough up and harrow and rake down lawns. 4th. Excavate the new walks, taking soil out and spreading it over the adjacent sides of lawns and take material from old walks, place in the new walks and grade up.

These plans were discussed to considerable length and were finally adopted. Mr. Robert McCully in behalf of the G. A. R. asked that the association make calculations for a spot on which a soldiers monument could be erected. Mr. F. A. Emerick was appointed a committee to return the plans and have the necessary changes made. Mr. W. C. Stephens was appointed to draw up a resolution asking that the village allow $150 to be used toward making these imments. Messrs. D. W. Gardner, E. R. Redhead and F. E. Bacon were made a committee to present this resolution at the opening of the polls at charter election next Tuesday to be voted upon. After some further business of a miscellaneous nature the society adjourned subject to the call of the president.

G. A. R. Monument Fund.

The plan of starting a fund for the erection of a soldier's monument originated with Post Schenck the latter part of January and for a short time considerable activity was displayed by G. A. R. men, preparatory to a general canvass of the towns of Volney and Granby. Active work then seemed to cease, for the time being, and as far as the public in general knew the affairs remained in statu quo. Such however has not been the case. The Post for reasons best known to themselves made no general effort to secure subscriptions for this purpose either in Fulton or Oswego Falls before yesterday but over $500 have been pledged by parties residing outside of the corporation limits of the two villages. Yesterday the members of the committee started out canvassing the village and it is the intention now to continue steadly and secure all the subscriptions they can for this commendable movement.

St. Patrick's Evening.

The Father Matthew T. B. & L. society celebrated "St. Patrick's Day in the Evening" by giving a grand entertainment at Stephens Opera House. Long before the time for the curtain to rise, the gathering had become exceedingly large. Bogue's orchestra was present and entertained those in attendance until it was time for the performance to begin. The entertainment throughout was of a most pleasing nature and reflects great credit on all the participants. It consisted of vocal and instrumental music, recitations, the temperance drama "The Social Glass" and an eloquent address on "Why Ireland Should be a Nation" by Rev. William Earley.

Certificates of Incorporation Filed.

The certificate of incorporation of "The Mackey Manufacturing Company" of Phoenix has been filed in the county clerk's office. Loomis, Judson W. Loomis, Charles F. Loomis, Edmund Merry, John C. Mackey, Addison D. Merry, Arthur W. Hawks, J. I. Van Doren, and Henry S. Van Wermer.

The subscriber will sell vacant lots in desirable locations on very liberal terms, small payments, and help the purchaser to build if desired, or will sell houses and lots cheap and already to move into.

[illegible] He [illegible] to Buffalo [illegible] Fulton from his [illegible]. Poor Levi, you are but another example of the many who are unable to withstand the craving for strong drink. While in New York last summer, we visited the Sailor's Snug Harbor one of the most beautiful spots on Staten Island. Here sailors who have reached a certain age are allowed to come and pass the declining years of their life in ease and comfort—we might even say luxury—as the institution is so indowed with property which has so increased in value that the trustees are unable to spend the income that is constantly pouring in. Upon the books we found the name of Levi Montague, who if he leaves strong drink alone, has the privilege, of enjoying, free of charge, all the comfort that this praiseworthy institution affords. Again we say poor Levi, your only enemy is strong drink. For this you sacrifice a comfortable home, a warm and easy bed, good substantial food and beautiful surroundings.

[illegible] dairy business is the only branch [illegible] in which the principles of [illegible] effort has been successfully employed. There is no question that [illegible] products both of butter and [illegible] are superior in quality to the [illegible] of private manufacture. Making good butter and cheese is an art requiring skill, care and cleanliness. In a large factory the product is important enough to pay for these, while in a small dairy they are considered often of too little consequence to be looked after.

The North British Agriculturist publishes a calculation of the egg trade of the United Kingdom, which is replete with interesting figures. The number of fowls is set down at 25,000,000, and after allowing for male birds, chickens and sitters, it is estimated that there are 6,000,000 laying hens, producing 600,000,000 eggs per year, allowing 100 eggs to each. This will allow two dozen per year per capita to the population of 25,000,000 people. But this is not the only source of supply, as about 1,000,000,000 eggs are imported from abroad. The imported and domestic egg supplies weigh about 7,200 tons and at a penny each represents a value of £6,666,680.

Everybody admits that clover is the best kind of hay for cows, but is commonly objected to as food for horses, especially for those inclined to heaves. It is often dusty because it is apt to be injured in curing. Another objection is that horses like clover so well and eat so greedily of it that their stomachs are overloaded. Injury from hard driving under such circumstances is inevitable. But if clover hay is cut and moistened, then mixed with a little meal, it is probably the most economical feed for horses, and will do no injury to any, however broken-winded. Clover hay is extremely nutritious, and only a small quantity per day will be needed when fed with grain.

Size of the Brain.

The average weight of the brain in men is forty-seven ounces, and in women some four or five ounces less; the human organ being absolutely heavier than that of any of the lower animals except the elephant and the whale with brains of ten and five pounds respectively. As a rule mental capacity and the size of the brain quite closely correspond, and it has been observed that a brain weight of less than thirty-two ounces in an adult person is always accompanied by a defective intellect. The rule has its exceptions, however, a notable one being that of Gambetta, the small weight of whose brain, less than forty-four ounces, is attracting the attention of French anthropologists. A contrasting case has recently been furnished in an idiot with a brain of fifty-five ounces.

Familiar great brains are those of Cuvier and Webster, each exceeding 64 ounces; and of Dr. Abercrombie, 63 ounces, and of Duypreten, 63 1-2 ounces. Descartes, Raphael and Voltaire had small heads, while that of Napoleon was only slightly above the average, and that of Schiller not at all. The lightest brain on record weighed eight ounces and belonged to an idiot boy, and that of an idiot woman weighed ten ounces. The average brain of Englishmen is 49 ounces; that of Frenchmen a little over 45 ounces; that of Dutch, Italians, Swedes and Lapps comes nearer the English, while the German brain is heavier. In India the weight is 41 to 44 ounces, in Africa 43 and in America 48.

[illegible] he told the officer that he had been visited during the night by the [illegible] Vicker, who had proceeded to reconstitute himself in the terrified prisoner's presence. He seemed to believe it was reality. Every night it came to him, and at the end of a week he was much broken down. In the hospital it has been the same with him except when he is kept very soundly asleep under narcotic influence. He dreams that the mangled pieces of his friend are strewn about the room, where they lie a while inanimately, as they did before he packed the body into the trunk and threw the head into the river. Then the fragments begin to quiver. Soon they move slowly toward each other, until they are in a heap. Next they adjust themselves into a human form. But the head is missing. At length that, too, comes into the room, its hair dripping with the water of the river in which it has lain. With a horrible smile on its face, it places itself on the shoulders of the figure, and menaces the murderer. Unger shrieks out at this point and the apparation vanishes from his imagination. All efforts have failed to relieve him of these visions, and the prison physician advises his removal to the State asylum for lunatic criminals.

The Cost of Smoking.

If we deduct from the total population as non-smokers all children under 15, constituting 40 per cent. of the total population of 60,000,000, it leaves 36,000,000 of whom one-half are females; deducting these gives a male population above the age of 15, of 18,000,000. If six out of every ten males above the age of 15 smoke, it means that 10,800,000 persons consume 3,510,898,488 cigars, or an average per smoker of 325 cigars per annum. This is less than one cigar per day. The average smoker however, is not apt to be contented with a daily allowance of one cigar, demanding at least two. If the latter basis is the nearer correct, the army of cigar smokers would be 4,800,449, being 8 per cent. of the total population above the age of 15.

Whatever the number of smokers, it is a moderate estimate to place the cost of smoking to the people of the United States at $200,500,000. If the cost for chewing tobacco is added the total expenditure for tobacco reaches $256,500,000; that is a sum which represents a per capita tax of $3.44 per annum. If the number of smokers is 4,809,449, the average expense of smoking is $42.09 each per annum; if the number is 7,900,000 the cost is $28.64 per individual; 10,800,000 it falls to $19.12, a sum sufficient to afford one five cent cigar daily, and leave a balance of 87 cents for extras.

What relation the expenditure for the smoking habit bears to the consumption of a few other articles more or less of a luxury is seen by the following exhibit, the figures showing the estimated cost to the consumer, averaging coffee at 20 cents per pound, tea 50 cents, cocoa and chocolate at 40 cents, and sugar at 6 cents.

Liquor, $700,000,000; tobacco, 256,500,000; sugar, $189,000,000; coffee, tea, cocoa, $180,000,000; schools, 110,000,000.—American Grocer.

"[illegible] Many Of We."

"Mamma, is there too many of we?"
The little girl asked with a sigh.
"Perhaps you wouldn't be tired, you see,
If a few of your childs would die."

She was only seven years old—the one
Who spoke in that strange, sad way,
As she saw her mother's impatient frown
At the children's boisterous play.

There were half a dozen who around her stood
And the mother was sick and poor,
Worn out with the care of the noisy brood,
And the fight with the wolf at the door.

For a smile or a kiss, no time, no place,
For the little one least of all;
And the shadow that darkened mother's face,
O'er the young life seemed to fall.

More thoughtful than any, she felt more care,
And pondered in childhood's way
How to lighten the burden she could not share
Growing heavier day by day.

Only a week, and little Claire
In her tiny white trundle bed
Lay with blue eyes closed, and the sunny hair
Cut close from the golden head.

"Don't cry," she said—and the words were low,
Feeling tears that she could not see—
"You won't have to work and be tired so
When there ain't so many of we."

But the dear little daughter who went away
From the home that for once was stilled,
Showed mother's heart from that dreary day
What a place she had always filled.

A Veritable Poem of Poems.

Mrs. H. A, Deming of San Francisco is said to have occupied a year in hunting up and fitting together the following thirty-eight lines from thirty-eight English poets. The names of the authors are given below:

1—Why all this toil for triumphs of an hour?
2—Life's a short summer man a flower.
3—By turns we catch the vital breath, and die,
4—The cradle and the tomb, alas! so high.
5—To be is better far than not to be,
6—Though all man's life may seem a tragedy;
7—But light cares speak when mighty cares are dumb,
8—The bottom is but shallow whence they come.
9—Your fate is but the common fate of all;
10—Unmingled joys here to no man befall.
11—Nature to each allots his proper sphere,
12—Fortune makes folly her peculiar care;
13—Custom does often reason overrule,
14—And throw a cruel sunshine on a fool.
15—Live well, how long or short, permit to heaven,
16—They who forgive most shall be most forgiven.
17—Sin may be clasped so close we cannot see its face—
18—Vile intercourse where virtue has not place.
19—Then keep each passion down, however dear;
20—Thou pendulum betwixt a smile and tear;
21—Her sensual snares let faithless pleasure lay.
22—With craft and skill to ruin and betray;
23—Soar not too high to fall, but stoop to rise.
24—We masters grow of all that we despise
25—O, then renounce that impious self-esteem;
26—Riches have wings, and grandeur is a dream.
27—Think not ambition wise because 'tis brave,
28—The path of glory leads but to the grave.
29—What is ambition? 'This a glorious cheat,
30—Only destructive to the brave and great.
31—What's all the gaudy glitter of a crown?
32—The way to bliss lies not on beds of down.
33—How long we live not years but actions tell:
34—That man lives twice who lives the first life well
35—Make, then, while yet you may your God your friend,
36—Whom Christians worship, yet not comprehend.
37—The trust that's given guard, and to yourself be just:
38—For live we how we can, yet die we must.

OUR AMERICAN CITIES.

Opinions and Piquant Points on American Politics and People.

An American lady who had been fortunate (or unfortunate) enough to spend several years abroad said recently, "we waste too much time in visiting our own cities; an American town has no individuality; when you have seen one you have seen all. Go to Europe if you would see city life in all its diversity.' Possibly there may be one grain of truth in the statement, but the more one sees of the inner and outer life of our representative places, the more one questions the presence of even the grain of truth. Representative American cities do not especially resemble each other even in externals, much less do they in their inner life. The fourteen-story tours which the narrow limits of New York seem to render necessary give an entirely different character to the city to what one finds in New Orleans, where the low, two-story buildings suggest ease and leisure and blissful ignorance of the modern elevator. The narrow, crooked streets of Boston produce an atmosphere wholly unlike that of the spacious avenues and parks of Washington. The differences extend even to trifles. In Boston one is besieged at every corner by venders of flowers; in New Orleans one meets instead the colored woman with her basket of confections that no one else has discovered the secret of making; in Philadelphia the indefatigable pretzel seller is found at every [illegible]; in Washington is heard the [illegible] dozen fried oysters in a box [illegible]. Again, the denizen of the [illegible] about what he [illegible] ered on one side, while a very audacious young girl will sometimes vary it by making a double bag and closing it with silver rings. One imagines at first that every one is intent on getting his linen to the laundry at the earliest possible moment, but as the bag appears at all hours of the day and night, and every day in the week, and every member of every family carries one, that explanation fails and one is forced to conclude that the inevitable bag contains as great diversity of occupations as does the traveling satchel of "The Hub." In a luxurious southern city where everyone "breakfasts at noon and dines on the following day" both satchel and bag disappear and one is piqued to know where the packages disappear. Just what relation these and a thousand and one other peculiarites and differences bear to the question of precisive orthodoxy, municipal government and congressional politics, is a matter that the philosopher, and not the average woman must decide, but we firmly believe that the relationship exists. Perhaps the Concord school where it was decided "the how of the notwithstanding will come to our relief."

But if one is willing to believe that all American cities are alike, we must make a large reservation in Washington. There is but one Washington, though there are a few feeble imitations. It is unfortunate that so much has been said of the political affairs of the capital that one always associates with it every form of jobbery and "log-rolling" until patriotism well nigh dies out. In spite of its sobriquet as "the city of magnificent distances" the thought is present that the internal corruption on which so many are wont to ditate must have had some effect upon its external appearance, and we look with a general uncanniness in the air. We expect in some mysterious way to be brought face to face with the corrupt bargain by which the city was located, we always remember John Adams, disappointed and jealous riding away from the inauguration of Jefferson, the social and political squabble of "the reign of Andrew Jackson," the long term of years when slavery sat supreme in the White House, the cowardly attack on Sumner, the dark period just before the opening of the war when it is said every member of Congress had a revolver in his desk. We think of credit mobiliers, of whisky rings, of disappointed office-seekers threatening the lives of public officials, of inauguration days when the rain pours in torrents and crowds of office-seekers jostling each other into a year's ill-humor, of the army of applicants for position who have slept in corridors of the White House to secure the first word with the new administration—all these and similar scenes come up until the mental picture is so dark that we expect to find its reflection in the very city of to-day. Our patriotism all lies outside of Washington, we think of the city itself as a place where all the humors that corrupt the body politic find an outlet.

But let any one—even if afflicted with chronic Anglomania or pessimism of the deepest dye—approach the city on the afternoon of an ideal Southern winter's day and see the white walls of the capitol rise up before him at every turn, and catch glimpses here and there of other public buildings, while the eastern branch of the broad Potomac sweeps by him on the left and the heights of Virginia rise in the distance and we predict he will hear the eagle screech "Hail Columbia" louder than he has ever heard it before. At the end of a week's visit he begins to understand what the Frenchman means when he says that all his countrymen go to Paris when they die; at the end of the second he has decided to settle up his business affairs immediately and camp out in the city, if he can do no better for the rest of his natural life; it is hardly safe for him to stay the third week unless he has all his worldly effects with him. He scarcely realizes the nature of the spell the city has so unexpectedly thrown over him until he is a hundred and fifty miles away and comes once more to the narrow checkerboard streets, unpaved, or stone paved roads, the dull monotony of mile after mile of blocks of red brick houses with white shutters and marble steps which a colored servant is always cleaning, and breaths once more the aristocratic of the most aristocratic town—the Quaker city. Then he appreciates that he has been in the most aristocratic city of the Union. The beauty of Washington comes not only from its superior location on an undulating tract surounded by hills, but art encouraged by private as well as public expense has done everything possible to make it attractive. When one remembers that nearly one-half the surface area of the city is given up to streets, and that in addition there are countless parks, circles, malls, reservations, open squares and public courts, the practical man is satisfied, for fresh air is guaranteed, and the esthetic person is at peace for the sense of sight is fully gratified. It is only in Washington, too, [illegible]

[illegible] when they return to Maine or [illegible] and desire to be aristocrats. At the Saturday receptions of Mrs. Cleveland, the lady who rides in her coach and four must alight in the rain at the foot of a long line of callers that extends from the White House door to the way to the gate and stand for an hour beside her cook, if the latter chooses to call, because, forsooth, "it is the people's day and all must be placed on the same footing." Life is said to be full of compensations, and the average woman draws a sigh of relief as she turns her back upon the crowd of drenched and tired people who have been standing on the pavement for an entire hour waiting for admission, and goes home well satisfied that she is not in duty bound to smile sweetly and shake hands with all. Perhaps it is as harmless an entertainment as could be devised for "the people," and there are always enough who are willing to pay the penalty for the position, so that official ranks are always full. But there is a most delightful resident society removed from this that must always be a charming one. More and more Washington is becoming the home of wealthy families attracted thither by the balmy air of a Southern city and the numerous advantages that Washington alone affords. More and more too it is becoming the seat of a literary circle that will soon contest the supremacy with Boston. For the purposes of the student, especially the student of American affairs, no place is like Washington with its Congressional library with its six hundred thousand volumes and two hundred thousand pamphlets, no time is wasted in looking for an American book,—it must be here by copyright law, and the fact is appreciated by the large number who resort there for study.

But interest in the city must always yield to interest in the Capitol. One's steps are always attracted first toward the grave and dignified Senate. There is an hour of leisure and repose about it that is always refreshing and never more so than after an afternoon in the House. The most conspicuous person on the floor of the Senate is Senator Ingalls. He is rarely in his seat, but paces up and down the floor (keeping carefully on the Republican side) with what some might call "a gigantic stride." His superfluous height is emphasized by a long Prince Albert coat, his iron grey hair is parted in the middle, and his face gives the impression of a man young in years but old in experience. He wears glasses, but the eye-glasses always protrude between the buttons of his coat and these he always twirls with a somewhat supercilious air in his journeyings about the room. He is fond of posing in a dramatic attitude and when he speaks it is with the air of one who expects the entire Senate to listen. His haughty, aristocratic mien is unprepossessing, and when he speaks his wealth of adjectives are so great that one sometimes forgets the main point. He alludes to "the din, the noise, the uproar, the confusion of the Senate corridors," and one instinctively listens for the turmoil described as existing below until we are startled to find his speech is half over. But he is justly regarded as one of the most eloquent and effective speakers in the Senate, and those who differ from him must honor him for having the courage of his convictions.

Senator Riddleberger is another uneasy member. He too paces the floor, carrying carefully, as if a new possession, a well-brushed silk hat, and his general air is of one who does not feel perfectly at home. His colleague, Senator Mahone, bears something of a resemblance to John B. Gough. The most striking articles of his dress are a pair of long limp cuffs extending apparently half way down his hand, and a flapping coat several sizes to large. His hair is long and brushed straight back from his forehead, and his appearance is of a busy man who has no time or thought to waste on externals.

Senator Allison is chairman of the Senate Committee on appropriations and has given evidence more than once of the care with which the various items have been considered. Among others was one appropriating $500 for raising a broken cable across the Columbia river. Senator Mitchell of Oregon was anxious to have the appropriation increased to $5,000 and have a new cable laid. His strongest argument was that there was not now and had not been lately a member on the Committee of Appropriations from west of the Rocky Mountains; that now a small appropriation was wanted and he thought they ought to have it. A vigorous speech from Senator Allison showed that he knew all the ins and outs of the request. The cable had originally been made for the service of the War Department, but had come to be used more for commercial purposes. The merchants now require a larger one and desire to have it laid at Government expense, so reported that the old cable could not be raised. He showed that not a single vigorous effort had been made by the proper Government boat, though two or three small private boats had tried to find the cable and possibly rejoiced [illegible] of their neighbor's chair for a footstool, as well as by the attitude of many who evidently consider the Hall of Representatives the most favorable place and the afternoon session the most opportune time to transact their private business. But after all, one realizes that they fairly represent fifty-five millions of people and a territory that a Westerner once described as bounded (in the future) "on the North by the Aurora Borealis, on the South by the procession of the equinoxes, on the east by the primeval chaos, and on the west by the Day of Judgment." It is a mystery to an observer how any observer can get inspiration enough to tare his passions to tatters when the official reporters are apparently the only ones listening, yet doubtless a member gifted with a vivid imagination is able to bring his one hundred and fifty thousand constituents into the Hall and thus find a motive for speaking. So we listen with strained ear while the member from Ohio attacks the pluro-pneumonia measure as "a bill to overthrow the whole federal system," and the member from New Jersey insists that he "would rather have all the cattle in the United States perish than have the right of local government stabbed and have the minions of federal government in the States," and the member from almost anywhere maintains that the bill granting enormous sums for river and harbor improvements ought to pass because "that is the best way to thwart railroad monopolies," and the Great Objector "rises to a point of order" and consumes half of an afternoon session in getting the votes of a quorum recorded. When one is tired of a prolonged debate on the river and harbor bill which is a repetition of every debate on the same subject since the Constitution was adopted and must end in the same way, it is a relief to look over the House and pick out the member from Kentucky, the Philadelphia representative betrayed by the ever-present laundry bag which holds his to-morrow's speech, the new member just sworn in who tries to appear unconcerned as if it were an every day affair but casts furtive looks about him to see what is going on, the chairman of the committee who wanders about doing out to his special friends his hour's allotted time in portions of two, five or ten minutes, the newly elected Senator who drops into the house to receive the congratulations of his brother representatives, and the sharp-eyed, long-fingered member who always suffers martyrdom in the cause of economy. But no bill is so exasperating as the private pension bill. Only one representative can know any thing about the merits of the case, yet hour after hour is consumed in this way because apparently no other opportunity is so favorable for gaining a reputation as "the soldier's friend," or "the people's friend," "or a friend of reintrenchment," and every one is anxious to go on record in a yea and nay vote as a friend of something. Then too there is no occasion for fitting up a sentimental, patriotic, dramatic, or telling speech which will read well at home. Everyone is as unwilling to hear a private pension speech as he is anxious to make one, so when the patience of the house is exhaused, cries of "vote," "vote," "vote" drown the exordiums and perorations of ambitious orators, and a pension bill slips through, the contents of which nobody knows or cares about.

The most interesting place about the Capitol is the Supreme Court room. It was occupied by the Senate until 1859 and it is here that all the great debates of the pre-rebellion times took place. There is nothing now in the quiet atmosphere of the room to suggest the stormy days of Webster, Clay, Calhoun and Benton. yet the daily frequenter will sometimes fancy when he grows weary of prosaic arguments that he hears again the majestic eloquence of Webster as he pleads the cause of the nation against the confeduracy. The main interests for two weeks and a half has centered upon the telephone cases. Unless the visitor knows in advance something of the history of the case he will be inclined to think he has strayed into the wrong room. The lawyers have of course argued the case wholly from the scientific standpoint and stand behind a table covered with electrical and magnetic apparatus of every description. One might well imagine himself in the lecture room of a college professor as he hears the exhaustive exposition of the principals of magnetism and sees each of the judges provided with plans, cuts, illustrations and the various parts of a telephone which he examines with the air of an expert as the lawyers advance in their arguments. The case has been of the utmost interest, involving as it does the question of the validity of the Bell patent, and has attracted to it the most eminent legal talent os the country. A greater intellectual treat cannot be imagined than it has been to listen to the close, logical, unvarnished yet convincing argument of Mr. Storrow the principal attorney for the Bell Telephone Co.

No glimpse of Washington is complete without some insight into life there during the rebellion, and the city is full of historic interest on that score, but is a chapter of itself. One incident only may be narrated [illegible] has not seen print before. [illegible]

RETRIBUTION.

BY "THE DUCHESS."

CHAPTER XIV.

Lady Valworth sighs profoundly as she drops into a chair, and receives with a thankful smile her late but ever welcome cup of tea.

"Such a crush! Such an abnormal temperature! Talk of India!"

She sighs mildly, as all fat women sigh. The concert had indeed been over-crowded, as the diva was to sing.

"I hate the ultra fashionable concerts!" says her sister-in-law, Mrs. Brand, who is feeling slightly fractious. "The others are nearly, if not quite, as good, and there is the advantage of finding one's self alive after them; but this afternoon! To look at the Duchess of Downshire was to guess the rest. Poor woman! she grew so flushed, so heavy, toward the end, that I wonder the chair didn't give way under her."

"Where is Millicent?" asks Lady Valworth, rather inconsequently.

"In her boudoir with Miss Roche." Mrs. Brand's tone is slightly sharp. "I asked Brown as I came in, and he told me so."

"How did she spend her day?"

"With some people rather out of my set, though in a specially good one—if a rather dull one—of their own. You remember the Durans—old Fanny Duran more particularly? She is keeping house for her nephew now."

"Maurice Duran, who lost his wife some years ago? A silly little woman with a temper, as I remember her. A daughter of Lord Ashborough's."

"Yes. The wife was insupportable to a degree. Well—he lives with his aunt now. And what on earth Millicent could see in Fanny Duran to make her miss to-day's concert is more than I can conceive; sometimes that girl worries me beyond belief."

"Well, I think it was very nice of her," returns Lady Valworth, pleasantly. "Few girls nowadays would give even a thought to an old woman like Fanny. Yes, it was kind of her."

She taps her spoon softly against the edge of her cup, and tells herself that this niece of hers—so soon to be her daughter-in-law—is indeed a treasure to be desired.

"I dare say you are right," she says. "And as to Nadine Roche, that little friend of hers, I have wanted to say a word to you about her for some time. She is such a sweet girl—so gentle, so thoroughly bred—but poor, you know. Her father, Gen. Roche, died suddenly, and there was no provision for the family—a very usual thing with military men—and so the poor child has to give lessons to eke out the slender income that she and her mother possess."

"A sad story—but hardly an uncommon one. You suggested that I could help her—that you wished to enlist my sympathies with regard to her, but as yet I hardly see how I can be of use. If money"——

"Oh! no. Nothing at all of that sort. But of late it has seemed to me that she is looking pale; and, now that the season is drawing to a close, and Millicent and I are to go to you to the park, I think it would be very good of you if you would ask the poor child there, too, if only to give her a breath of fresh air. She is looking really ill, it strikes me, and, if you could put her up for a bit, I know it would delight Millicent."

"Why, of course—of course," says kindly Lady Valworth. "Anything to please dear Millicent; and, besides, all you have said about Miss Roche quite interests me."

"She is well worth your interest," begins Mrs. Brand warmly, when footsteps on the landing outside check her. "Ah! here she comes, probably. Now you will be able to see for yourself what a remarkably charming creature she is."

The door, opening, admits the two girls. Millicent smiling, and a little mischievous perhaps, as a sort of armor against the scolding impending. Nadine calm and gentle as usual. Lady Valworth, as she takes her hand, holds it kindly, and gazes long into the girl's lovely face. Her blue eyes, innocent as a summer sky, her soft waving hair, the charm of her mobile mouth, all make a deep impression upon the mother of Granit Boyle.

"Mrs. Brand tells me you are looking pale, my dear," she begins, drawing the girl down upon the seat near her; "that London smoke has robbed you of all your pretty roses. I cannot speak from my own experience, of course, as this is the first time we have met, but it seems to me that a pretty child like you should not have such sorrowful eyes."

Nadine laughs a little, but the tears rise as she does so to the "sorrowful eyes."

"Are you strong—are you well!" goes on Lady Valworth, still keeping possession of the girl's hand.

"I think so. You are very good. To trouble yourself at all about me is very kind. And indeed there is nothing the matter with me—except—except that sometimes I feel a little tired."

"Tired. Ah! yes, I see. Well, there is a little scheme afloat about you. A tiny conspiracy, let me tell you. Have you ever heard of Valworth Park? Yes! It is a very pretty place, I will allow, and one calculated to bring back the blushes to pale cheeks," touching Nadine's face as she speaks. "Well! What do you think of our scheme? Will you like to come to me to the park for a week or two?"

"To go to the country—to see again the green fields—the trees—the flowers," breathes Nadine faintly.

"And more than that," laughs Lady Valworth gayly. "You shall not be left to the lambs for company. Millicent is coming to me, too, and a good many others. Some freinds of yours. Mr. Duran and his little Clytie, for example."

Where are the pale cheeks now, the languid lids? Gone. Uplifted are the lids, and from beneath them two great, eager, sparkling eyes gleam forth.

"It is true, my dear," chatters on her ladyship, pleased with the effect her announcement is having on the pretty child beside her, though she entirely misunderstands the pretty child's agitation. "I always have my house full in August, for many reasons. For one, the grouse; for another, because Capt. Boyle's birthday (my son, my dear) occurs in August, and I always give my big dance then." She smiles charmingly and pats Nadine's hand as though the mention of her handsome son is sweet to her. [illegible] stammering and faltering, afraid to refuse afraid (far more afraid) to accept, that little struggle with her conscience not being yet ended.

"Then that's all right," declares Lady Valworth heartily mistaking her indecision for shyness. "Millicent, darling," calling to Miss Grey, who has just come off victorious in an encounter with her auntie, who has, at the close of it, found herself declaring, very much against her better judgment, that Gerald Mascareens, for a pauper, is a wonderfully well regulated young man, and that, of course, there was no harm in Miss Grey's meeting him at Miss Duran's afternoons.

"So long as you remember you are engaged to your cousin," she winds up, desperately. Miss Grey shrugs her shoulders and nods acquiescence. The time is not yet ripe, she tells herself, for springing the entire truth "upon her already too distressed aunt." As she finishes this remarkable sentence in her own mind she laughs and assures herself that the lessons in German have not been entirely wanted!

"Millicent, darling," calls Lady Valworth, and Millicent, starting slightly, turns to her, "your little friend here has promised to come to me on the fifth. That is the day on which you have decided, is it not?" looking at Mrs. Brand. "Of course, my dear," to Nadine, "it will be nicer and more comfortable for you to travel with Mrs. Brand."

"Of course," says Mrs. Brand, and so the discussion ends. Nadine's conscience, whether satisfied or not, is forbidden further interference. All management in the affair has been taken out of her hands.

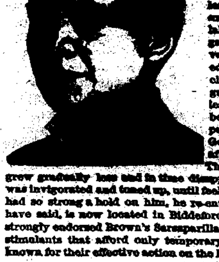
She is feeling depressed and rather nervous. Rising, as Millicent comes toward her, she bids a soft but hasty adieu to Lady Valworth.

"So soon, Nadine?" says Mrs. Brand. "Why, Lady Valworth has not had time to grow accustomed even to your face yet. Could you not stay and dine? You so seldom come to us on an off day, one that is separate from your German, that I should like to keep you to-night."

"Yes, do stay, Nadine," entreats Millicent.

"You need not mind your gown," says Mrs. Brand. "There will be nobody but Capt. Boyle." [illegible]

Pain in the Back.



Rev. Theodore Gerrish now settled over a Methodist church in Biddeford, Me., was formerly a resident of Bangor. While there he became afflicted with Kidney Disease. The symptoms of this too common trouble are a drawing down pain across the back extending downwards towards the loins, scanty and high colored urine, a tired feeling, restlessness, etc. These Mr. Gerrish had to such an extent as to make it impossible to continue his labors and he resigned, devoting his time to the regaining of his health. To this end he employed various physicians, tried many of the so called remedies, visited different places hoping a change of climate might improve his condition, but failed to gain the desired relief. Returning to Bangor he learned from a member of his family that she had been greatly benefited by the use of Brown's Sarsaparilla, and was advised to give it a trial. Mr. Gerrish did so, and to his great surprise found, after a few days, that his condition had improved. The tired feeling left him, the pains across the back grew gradually less and in time disappeared; he rested well at night; the whole system was invigorated and toned up, until feeling that he was free from the Kidney disease that had so strong a hold on him, he re-entered upon the duties of the ministry, and, as we have said, is now located in Biddeford. In addition to his testimonial Mr. Gerrish has strongly endorsed Brown's Sarsaparilla for the reason that it is not composed of alcoholic stimulants that afford only temporary relief, but of pure vegetable productions well known for their effective action on the Kidneys, Liver and Blood.

OUR Assemblyman has received the epithet of "Investigator Howe" from the fact that he demands an investigation in the executive mansion work. If he is working conscientiously to ferret out any crookedness that may have occurred, he is on the right track. The Watertown Times says: "If Assemblyman Howe, of Oswego, can substantiate his charges of crookedness in the capitol and executive mansion work there is likely to be a good deal of a row about the executive chamber. The trouble will be to prove it. There may be a moral certainty that more politics than brick have been built into the structure, but politics is an uncertain quantity and hard to measure." The bill which Mr. Howe opposed, i. e., that $37,000 be appropriated for finishing and furnishing the executive mansion was passed yesterday. Only six voted against it, Mr. Ainsworth being one of the number.

THE ocean yacht race between the Coronet and the Dauntless has been one of the chief topics of conversation during the past week. The former was victorious having sailed from New York to Queenstown in 14 days 19 hours and 3 minutes. The fastest days run made by the Coronet was 290 miles. The yacht Dauntless arrived about twenty-four hours later.

A system of inspection by the municipal authorities is provided for. The suggested penalty for failure to have a room thus provided is the forfeiture of the bill of a guest occupying such room.

[illegible] Ladies' fine [illegible]

[illegible] As Washington, as the train curves around a [illegible] curve and comes in sight of the city, the attention is at once centered on two very noticeable objects of interest, for, in addition to the usual jumble of trees, roofs and church spires of all sizes, shapes and denominations there is seen, first the stately dome of the national capitol, which by reason of its great size is the most prominent feature of the landscape, and then towering above even this the plain white tapering shaft of the Washington monument. So much has been written lately concerning this latter marvel of engineering skill that at first sight the average person is disappointed; but as the train slowly passes through the city finally winding along by the Smithsonian grounds ever approaching nearer and nearer to the monument its wonderful height becomes more and more apparent, and one makes a mental resolve that a visit to the monument shall be one of the first of the many trips which can be made by a sight seer at the Nation's capital.

Acting upon this resolution we started one morning to "view the landscape o'er" from the top of the monument. The location of the structure is far from being prepossessing. It is situated in the center of a large treeless tract of government land forming the western end of a long park extending from the capitol to the Potomac. At present the land is uneven, and covered with the remnants of the railroad built to convey the stone to the foot of the monument, and with brooken fragments of marble. There are no buildings upon it save a few tumble down wooden buildings formerly used by the workmen, and thus from lack of means of comparison near at hand the height of the work is not comprehended.

The monument stands at the center of an artificial platform about a hundred feet square which rises twenty feet above the surrounding plain and after climbing a rough flight of wooden steps leading to the platform a perception of its true height dawns on one as he gazes upon the polished blocks of white marble rising tier upon tier in enduring grandeur until they reach the altitude of over 500 feet.

The heavy door formed of a single plate of marble, creaks slowly back upon its hinges, we enter a narrow passage through the wall, the door closes and we are fairly within the structure.

Like everything else in Washington the running of the monument engines depend upon the "appropriation" and at the time of our visit owing to the lack of funds the elevator and lights were out of order. The darkness of the interior was oppressive, for the dim light which issued from the open door of a small stove and from a tallow candle "only served where'er it fell to make the darkness visible." The use of the stove was at once made manifest for a little hunch backed man hobbled out from his seat behind the stove and asked to see our passes. Here was a predicament for we had neglected to procure passes which the War Department issue to visitors who make the ascent, and the rules were presumably very strict. By this time our eyes had gradually become accustomed to the darkness and we could see the shaft of the elevator, supported at the corners by four huge iron pillars firmly braced together and protected at the sides by heavy wire netting and extending upward till it vanished in the darkness. Although it seemed an improbable statement at the time the doorkeeper assured us that when the elevator was sufficiently lubricated by congressional oil passengers could be carried safely to the top of the monument.

Some visitors were there before us, although we could not see them, and the flickering glimmer of their candle several hundred feet above us, together with the indiscribable resonant clang produced by their voices and steps on the iron platforms echoing and reechoing through the shaft produced a somewhat startling effect.

While we were meditating upon what was best to be done another party of three young men entered and the doorkeeper who had been propitiated by means of a cigar said as he examined their pass that it was all right and added in an undertone that it admitted five persons. Upon this hint we lighted our candles and started up the broad staircase between the elevator shaft and the wall. Of course we counted the steps and after climbing 18 of them on the north side arrived at a broad iron platform extending across the entire west side, another staircase on the south side and a second landing and we had completed one circuit and were 20 feet above the floor. So we went on, stairs and platforms, platforms and stairs, till we had climbed 50 flights and had completed the 900 steps, making up the ascent. Our progress was not rapid for two reasons, 900 steps are not conducive to rapid propress, and then too, there were many objects along the walls to attract our attention.

After a few moments we arrived at the first of the memorial stones which are embedded in the walls of blue gneiss with which the column is lined. These stones over a hundred in number are those which have been presented by different organizations to symbolize their regard for the purpose for which the monument was erected. They are arranged in groups of two or three a few feet above the platforms on the east and west sides of the wall and are as varied in their appearance as are the localities from whence they came. Every state and territory is represented, nearly all the leading counties of the world and there are numerous stones from city corporations. Many of the stones are handsomely carved and among the many devices the square and compass of Masonry and the three links of Odd Fellowship are very common, and on one stone coming from Rome appears the Keys of St. Peter's. The Sioux City [illegible]

[illegible] 13 feet thick; 10 feet higher they are reduced to 8 feet; and at the top to 5½ feet in thickness. About a hundred feet below the summit there spring out from each wall the arches of granite which are to meet above to support the top of the shaft. By a peculiar arrangement the blocks of these arches do not fit accurately thus making an allowance for the slight but perceptible motion due to strong winds and move especially to the effect of sun's heat. This latter force by heating the face of the monument nearest it causes it to expand and forces the opposite side about 4 inches from the vertical so that in the morning the movement leans toward the west and in the afternoon toward the east.

Emerging at last through a sort of trap door at the top of the east flight of steps we found ourselves upon a square platform cut up into a series of spaces by the arches of stone just mentioned and in each of these niches is a window closed by a block of stone suspended upon a peculiar crane like hinge. The view is wonderful. Far below stretch the streets and buildings of the city, seen as if upon a map, even the largest edifices looking small by comparison for we are at the top of the highest structure built by man.

At the east are seen in succession the Agricultural Department building, the Smithsonian Institute, the National Museum, Botanical gardens and finally at the end of the beautiful park in which they are all located the capitol stands out against the blue of the distant hills. But if all of these had once seemed lofty buildings they seem so no longer, We are above them all. Even the capitol itself, although on a hill which adds to its apparent height, is below us. The difference in height is all the more marked if we compare the true height of the capitol and the monument for if they were side by side the new statue of Liberty (151 ft) could be placed on the top of the present statue of Liberty which surmounts the capitol (285 ft) and there would still be needed a liberty pole 111 feet high before their added heights would equal that of the monument.

At the south on the height beyond the eastern branch of the Potomac is seen the long mass of the government insane asylum. On the Virginia shore raises a long forest clad range of hills amid which may be discovered the pillared edifice at Arlington Heights where 15,000 Union soldiers lie buried. Alexandria, six miles distant, is clearly visible with its houses, churches and shipping lying along the harbor and the broad Potomac stretches away like a silver ribbon till it vanishes between the distant hills.

Still nearer and almost at our feet lies the main portion of the city and standing out prominently are the marble and granite masses of the new State Department, the White House and the treasury. A short distance to the north east is seen the large barn like structure of the new pension office which is modeled after the Borgia palace and of which Gen. Sheridan said after a visit of inspection, that the only criticism which he had to make was that the building was fire proof. Near this are the patent office, post office department and court house, while scattered throughout the city are the numerous circles with the inevitable equestrian statue in the center. Taken all together the effect is wonderful and could Baron Von Humbolt now look over the delightful and comprehensive view from the monument as we did, he would repeat with added emphasis that remark which he did make as he stood on the western crest of the Capitol Hill and surveyed the scene "I have not seen a more charming panorama in all my travels."

PIANOS.

[illegible]

[illegible] the most perplexing problems of Mr. Cleveland's Administration, and it is with a great sense of relief that the question is settled.

The appointments of Judge Cooley, of Michigan, for six years, ex-Representative Morrison for five, and Mr. Biggs of Alabama, for two years, was generally anticipated. I mean the appointments were anticipated, but the time for which these gentlemen were appointed created suprise, for it was expected that Mr. Morrison would be chosen for the long term, and that the second place would be given to a Republican. Judge Schoonmaker of New York, who was appointed for four years, and Mr. Walker of Vermont for three, had not been regarded as possibilities, and no body in Washington had ever heard of the name of the latter in connection with anything.

He is a former law pupil of Senator Edmunds, and it is said that the President, having grown weary in trying to construct a satisfactory Commission, and finding it impossible to get a suitable Republican from Massachusetts, sent for the Vermont Senator and followed his advice in nominating Mr. Walker. The latter was represented by Mr. Edmunds as being a man both learned and practical, of high standing and unblemished character. He is also endorsed as a solid and orthordox Republican, which, from Mr. Edmunds meant that he was not a Blaine man.

Speaking of Mr. Edmunds reminds me of something that ex-Senator Eaton, of Connecticut recently said of him. The outlook towards '88 was being discussed, and while Mr. Eaton expressed the opinion that Senator Sherman would at this time be the choice of a Republican nominating convention he remarked 'But of all the Republicans, I think Mr. Edmunds would make the best President, and his administration would be clean." He added, however, that it would be impossible for him to get the nomination.

The fears expressed by a Washington physician, that President Cleveland is liable to die from apoplexy before the end of his term unless he changes his habits of life, are not shared by the President's private secretary. Col. Lamont thinks that Dr. Sower's warning is based entirely on the assumption that the President is gaining flesh and taking no excercise. This, he says is not the case, Mr. Cleveland weighs less than when he first went to Washington and takes as much exercise as most men. He does not walk about the streets of the city, but he walks about his little farm late in the afternoon when the weather permits. Then the Colonel suggests mysteriously that the President has other ways of taking exercise, which, it would seem, he thinks it would not be dignified to mention. Can it be that the President has a private gymnasium in some corner of the White House which the world knows not of? It must be so. At any rate Col. Lamont says that he keeps himself in good condition by physical exercise and that there is no occasion for apprehension in regard to his health.

The National Drill which will commence in this city on the 23rd of May will end on the 30th of that month, "Decoration Day," with a grand combination parade of the National Guardsmen and the Grand Army of the Republic. There will be $26,500 in cash distributed in prizes, besides stands of colors, gold, silver, and bronze medals, special medals and plate trophies.

The grounds of the camp are those lying around the Washington Monument; and the drill ground is the level ellipse lying just south of the Presidential mansion known as the White Lot. This level plain which is one half mile in circumference, will be fenced in, and stands sufficient to seat from 30,000 to 35,000 will be erected. The grounds were granted by the Secretary of War on approval of Gen. Sheridan, and the committee have given bonds for their return in perfect order after the drill.

Daily contests will here be held to prove the excellence of the citizen soldiery and infantry, artillery, cavalry, and zouave tactics. Cadet Corps of military schools will drill for prizes as well as the champion companies from thirty-six States, and bands and drum corps will be in attendance from East, South and West. Each evening there will be a grand dress parade, and on Governor's Day and on Memorial Day the entire army corps from camp George Washington will parade on the broad, asphalt avenues of the city.

Something that will quiet the nerves, give strength to the body, induce refreshing sleep, improve the quality of the blood, and purify and brighten the complexion, is what many persons would be very glad to obtain. Carter's Iron Pills are made exactly for this class of troubles, and are remarkably successful in accomplishing the ends desired, as above named. They are useful for both men and women. Sold by all druggists. Price 50 cents a box. See advertisement.

Carter's Little Liver Pills may well be termed "Perfection." Their gentle action and good effect on the system, really make them a perfect little pill. They please those who use them.

A Remarkable Case.

Oct. 21st, 1886.

MESSRS. W. H. HOOKER & CO.

Gentlemen—About three years ago my little grandchild (now nearly five years of age) was stricken with Eczema. Beginning in a mild form he slowly but surely became worse until his life was despaired of. Six months ago he had scrofulus looking sores, characteristic of Eczema, completely covering his face and body, effecting his hands to such an extent that his finger nails came off. Such was his alarming condition that it left me little hope of his recovery. I, as a last extremity, resorted to all the remedies advertised as good for Eczema, not only that, have consulted many physicians, including nine weeks treatment at the Oswego Hospital. From this treatment, the very best to be so cured in this vicinity, the child derived little or no benefit. I wish to state these facts in detail so you may fully understand (as I do) the remarkable success I have met with in using Dr Acker's Blood Elixir. Added to my own convictions the fact that physicians failed, giving up the case as incurable, I am only happy to assure you that the child owes its life to Dr. Acker's Blood Elixir. He is apparently on the road to entire recovery, in the near future. I cheerfully confirm and attest to the above and believe others (from my statement) suffering, may have reason to believe in the efficacy of this excellent remedy. Very Truly,

MRS. LESAGE.

Useful Information.

We have just received from the publisher a copy of the 1887 edition of Conklin's Handy Manual of Useful Information, a neat book of 288 pages of closely printed matter, absolutely teeming with information on over 2,000 subjects. It contains a million facts, also many tables of practical value for everyone in all sorts of business trades and professions. It is handsomely bound in alligator, with a gold side stamp and sprinkled edges. The wonder to us is how the book can be sold for the nominal price asked for it. Its statistics are brought down to date, and will be found correct in every particular. Every one should have a copy. It will be mailed to any address on receipt of 25 cents, by Geo. W. Scrofula, which produced a painful inflammation in my eyes, caused me much suffering for a number of years. By the advice of a physician I commenced taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using this medicine a short time I was completely

Cured

My eyes are now in a splendid condition, and I am as well and strong as ever.—Mrs. William Gage, Concord, N. H.

For a number of years I was troubled with a humor in my eyes, and was unable to obtain any relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has effected a complete cure, and I believe it to be the best of blood purifiers.—C. E. Upton, Nashua, N. H.

From childhood, and until within a few months, I have been afflicted with Weak and Sore Eyes. I have used for these complaints, with beneficial results, Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and consider it a great blood purifier.—Mrs. C. Phillips, Glover, Vt.

I suffered for a year with inflammation in my left eye. Three ulcers formed on the ball, depriving me of sight, and causing great pain. After trying many other remedies, to no purpose, I was finally induced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, three bottles of this medicine, have been entirely cured. My sight has been restored, and there is no sign of inflammation, sore, or ulcer in my eye.—Kendal T. Bowen, Sugar Tree Ridge, Ohio.

By Taking

My daughter, ten years old, was afflicted with Scrofulous Sore Eyes. During the last two years she never saw light of any kind. Physicians of the highest standing exerted their skill, but with no permanent success. On the recommendation of a friend I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which my daughter commenced taking. Before she had used the third bottle her sight was restored, and she can now look steadily at a brilliant light without pain. Her cure is complete.—W. E. Sutherland, Evangelist, Shelby City, Ky.

(Special to THE TIMES).

The all absorbing topics have been the sale of the Stewart pictures and the result of the trial of Tom Cleary. The first of these events passed upon record as being the second largest sale in the country, and as having secured the highest price for any one picture ever sold under the auctioneer's hammer.

The Seney sale of two years ago gave an impetus to art prices and led to the new method of selling collections of greater or less merit in large public halls where the movement might be made an event in society. This was the case of the Morgan sale of last year and of the Stewart sale of this year. Comparing the totals of the three we have this list,

Morgan Sale—1886,	$781,000
Stewart Sale—1887,	513,750
Seney Sale—1885,	406,600

The highest price attained in the sale of Mrs. Morgan's paintings was $45,500 that sum being paid for "Breton's Communicants." The highest price in the Stewart sale was $66,000 for Meissonier's "Friedland 1807."

Here is a list of some of the pictures:

Rosa Bonheur's "Horse Fair,"	$53,000
Knaus' "Children's Party,"	21,000
Tryon's "Cattle,"	11,000

Nineteen canvasses sold for prices ranging from $7,500 to $66,000.

The most noted picture of the whole collection and the one upon which the greater amount of public attention seems to have centered is the "Horse Fair" by the French artist, Rosa Bonheur. This painting bears date 1853. In size it is eight feet high by nearly eighteen feet long. Upon the canvass are represented the procession of prize horses at a cattle show. The great value of the picture centers in the accuracy to nature with which the artist has represented the horses and their attendants. The horses are of the breed so common in France and which are becoming so common in this country for drawing heavy loads. The freedom with which the artist has handled her subjects; the ease and grace of motion of the animals, and the genuine admiration which the attendants of the horses exhibit for the respective steeds are depicted with such a wonderful accuracy that the observer of ehe picture is thoroughly enraptured. The Munkacsy now on exhibition appeals to ones religious nature and calls forth sentiment of deepest pity, but the Bonheur appeals to one's love of the beautiful in nature, to the ordinary, the commonplace of life's experience.

When originally painted, the artist received $8,000. William Winter of Hoboken had it in his possession and exhibited it in different parts of the country. In 1857, it passed to the possesion of Mr. Stewart who paid $40,000. The picture has risen in value at the rate of $500 per year and now Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, by the payment of $53,000 presents it as a free gift to the Metropolitan Museum in Central Park. Hence it becomes the permanent property of the city and will, of course, be the gem of this already very worthy collection.

Notwithstanding the high prices shown in the above list, the prediction of the Wanderer is fulfilled. In a former letter we said that the extravagant prices attained at the Morgan sale would not be obtained this time. A Gerome that cost the estate $33,000 brought but $7,100. The shrinkage of values amounted to about $200,000. The fact is the foreign artists played with Stewart's pride and made the price of a picture they suspected he liked large enough to tempt his pocket book. Rather than let anybody else get the picture, he bought it. That accounts for the $33,000 Gerome whose real value is in the neighborhood of $6,000.

I notice that Wall street magnates want something that brings some substantial return and to them pictures are sometimes dead stock that can't be watered and never has a dividend. So much for the Stewart sale.

I notice The Sun is inaugurating a new departure in issuing an evening edition. The fact of the matter is The Sun and The Star are having a hard time of it. So far as The Sun is concerned, it used to be a popular paper with the workingmen, but its attitude toward Gen. Grant rather decreased its circulation among that class. Then its defection toward Butler gained it some friends but they did not stick. Its subsequent advocacy of the K. of L. somehow don't accomplish the object aimed at. I rather guess the cheapness of the dailies that give a great deal more news in detail than The Sun has something to do with this matter. The editorial salary of $25,000 which Mr. Dana receives is to be met and this new departure is a movement, so I am creditably informed, toward the suspension of the morning edition and becoming exclusively an evening paper.

The Star, despite its governmental patronage languishes. The newsdealers say they don't sell. As a matter of fact, the state management have been supplementing the work of the American News Company by sending out a separate wagon to supply the trade. I notice that the wagon comes back nearly as full as when it starts out. Like as in all other sorts of business the path to success is not strewn with roses in newspaper management and the newspaper man knows better than anybody else how badly the thorns scratch and prick.

It was during the term of this Reform Board that among other things a compromise was effected between the Old Water Co, and the village by which the village received $3,000 from the Water Co. and assumed the maintenance of the race bridges from hence forth perpetually—an arrangement now not fifteen years old and yet which has already cost $800, for one bridge some years ago and an iron bridge some year or so ago costing $1,400, besides the maintaining of three or four other bridges costing nearly or quite as much more, as well as the paying of the costs and damages in the Dodgson-Sharp drowning suit of nearly $4,000, making already $5,000 or $6,000 costs paid because of such compromise as well as the prospect of paying on to the end of time.

No, the village is not spoiling for another Citizens Ticket, and if the Times thinks so it is sadly mistaken."

Now all this must be attributed to the ignorance of the Patriot in this matter, as it is preposterous to suppose for a moment that it would endeavor to mislead its readers. The records show that the compromise mentioned occurred ten years before this Board was in power and not then until the people had voted to accept the proposition made by the Water Company. The following communication by a member of this board also nails the statement made by the Patriot to the position where it belongs and insinuates that the information was probably received from a source whence a paper of such strong Republican proclivilities would not naturally look when seeking for political information of which it is ignorant.

Fulton, N. Y., Mar. 29th, 1887.

Editor FULTON TIMES:

I notice an article in the Patriot and Gazette of last week headed "Citizens' Ticket" which I feel does myself as well as all the other members of the Village Board, who were elected on said "Citizens' Ticket" and served with me, such gross injustice that I must reply to it. Though the article in the Patriot is void of truth and totally false and so generally known to be false from beginning to end that it may be deemed silly in me to notice it, or spend any words or thought on the matter. But possibly the editor of the Patriot has allowed himself to be misled by some meddling fellow who would rather lie than tell the truth (I am inclined to think such is the case as he has often done so before) and, having taken his word for it, has published the article without referring to the records himself, which if he had taken the trouble to examine for a moment I feel sure he would not have said what he did.

The "Reform Board" of which the Patriot speaks of having done such bad things to the great disadvantage of the taxpayers &c., consisted of the following:

W. S. Nelson,
G. M. Case,
C. G. Bacon,
F. D. VanWagenen,
Wm. Waugh,
J. W. Francis,
M. C. Highriter.

They were elected in the spring of '74 and the question of settlement of the bridge matter with the Hydraulic Water Company had all been gotten along with and closed up years before and was done by a vote of the taxpayers instead of the board of trustees of which he says the citizens had enough. The question of of the bridges or the settlment of the law suit was never under discussion by the board elected on the "Citizens' Ticket."

It seems to me the article in the Patriot was uncalled for and did injustice to the citizens' ticket or at least to the members elected thereon.

ONE OF THE REFORM BOARD.

Four Generations in One House.

There is living in one house in this village four generations of one family and strange to state only one representative of each generation. They live at the corner of Lyon and Second streets and are as follows: Mrs. Howe, widow of Allen Howe, who has reached the age of about 85 years; her daughter, Mrs. Jane Bettinger, her grand-daughter, Mrs. Gilman, widow of the late Henry Gilman and her great-grandson, who is the son of Mrs. Gilman.

What Next?

At the Special Meeting of the taxable inhabitants called by the village board for Thursday evening very little enthusiasm was manifested doubtless from the fact that the local representatives of the Water Works company made no effort to carry the resolution voted upon, having expressed themselves to the effect that the meeting was illegal. As can be seen from the regular report of the proceedings, 211 votes were cast. Fourteen for the proposition and 197 against.

Rev. Dr. Atwood of Canton, N. Y., who on Sunday March 13th occupied the pulpit at the Universalist church is expected to make an effort to re-organize the society of that denomination in this village.

During the past week we have had nights in which the murcury has nearly if not quite touched zero. During some of the day we have been favored (?) with wind, sleet and snow—in fact typical winter weather.

The Commanders of Grand Army Posts have been requested to appoint two delegates to represent their Posts at a meeting of the G. A. R. association of Oswego county to be held at the rooms of Post No. 367 in the village of Mexico on April 20th.

Mr. A. Howe returned from his Florida trip last Saturday. His family remained two days longer in New York arriving home yesterday. Mr. Howe visited Rev. H. B. Goodyear pastor of the Episcopal church in this village at Green Cove Springs Fla., and found him much improved in health. Mr. Goodyear expects to return to his labors here about the first of June.

The following officers have been elected by the Father Mathew Temperance society of Oswego Falls for the next six months: President, Philip Lynch; first vice-president, John Winters; second vice-president, Andrew Branigan; recording secretary, Chos. Mangeot; corresponding secretary, Eddie McGan; financial secretary, James Gallagher; treasurer, Jerry Cullen; librarian, Richard McCaffray.

On the first page of to-day's TIMES will be found an article entitled "Our American Cities." It is from the pen of Miss Lucy M. Salmon formerly of this village and sister of K. F. and G. H. Salmon. The article is taken from the McGregor (Iowa) News and published by us for the benefit of the lady's many friends in this vicinity who look with interest and pleasure upon her achievement in the field of higher literature.

Before the opening of the polls yesterday morning the recomendations made by President Sharp to be raised for general and special purposes for the ensuing year were voted upon seperately. The amount recommended for lighting streets was reduced from $1,500 to $1,200 and the rent of court room from $60 to $50. As no water for fire and other purposes is used by the village no appropriation was made. Mr. D. W. Gardner presented a resolution asking that $150 be allowed from the regular fund, which, together with $150 from the Village Improvement Society be used to make improvements on the village park. This was carried.

The New Board.

The contest in yesterday's election was carried on by "Old Vets" as far as village officers are concerned, and was a hard fought battle for the supremacy. All the candidates, for President and Trustees had either served on the board before or had run for the office. Every effort was made by the candidates and their friends to bring to the polls all that could possibly be secured, no stone being left unturned to accomplish this. The result was that a larger vote was cast than ever before, we think, at our village election, 902 being polled, five more than at the election of 1884, which was "high water mark" up to that time.

The Board will be composed of four Republicans and two Democratic members, namely, Messrs. Pardee and More who were elected on the Democratic ticket last spring. Mr. Waugh made an excellent president and no doubt will again give as good satisfaction, while Messrs. Rice and Nichols will undoubtedly look carefully to the interests of the village in an able manner, having previously served the people.

The new Board will therefore enter upon its duties unhampered by new public questions of which they are ignorant. What will it do? Although there is an undoubted majority, we trust that it will be free from partizan strife and that in making appointments, it will select the best men for the places. We infer that they will do this for in the circular to the taxpayers of March 28, signed by Messrs. Waugh, Rice and Nichols they say: "And we are not pledged to any man for any place or appointment and will not be."

Village Caucuses.

The Democrats held their caucus in Stephens opera house hall last Saturday evening. The meeting was called to order by Patrick Cullen. W. S. Nelson was made chairman and the following were placed in the field as candidates for village officers. All were nominated by acclamation except on the office of collector, there being two candidates in the field for this office, namely, Patrick O'Grady and Lewis Fuller.

John H. Sharp,	for	President.
Willard Johnson,	"	Trustee.
George Kellogg,	"	"
Prentice Youmans,	"	Assessor.
Patrick O'Grady,	"	Collector.
William J. Lovejoy,	"	Treasurer.

The Republicans held their caucus in Summerville hall, the meeting being called to order by Fred Bennett. Frank Dilts was made chairman. As in the Democratic caucus there was no strife outside of the office of collector. In both instances the slate had been made up. For collector the names of James Hill and Otto Schultz were voted upon and the choice fell upon the former. The following were the candidates placed in the field:

William Waugh,	for	President.
Arvin Rice,	"	Trustee.
C. R. Nichols,	"	"
Bruce J. Kimball,	"	Assessor.
James Hill,	"	Collector.
John H. Case,	"	Treasurer.

A successful Canadian dairyman thinks bran, peas and corn mixed make the best butter producing food for cows. Cows should be milked with dry hands. Cows should not be milked in proximity to the dung pile.

Maintaining the Fertility of Soils.

There are a few rules in regard to maintaining fertility which should be followed. One is that all the unsold or unfed portions of crops should, if possible, be returned to the soil upon which they grew, or an equivalent should be returned. Thus, if wheat is raised, the grain sold and the straw composted with the dung of animals, we form a manure which returns much that was removed by the crop. If the straw be partly or wholly fed to animals, still a large portion naturally finds its way back to the soil. A portion of the plant food supply of the soil is irrecoverably lost in the grain sold, in the bones of the animals, in the milk sold off the farm, etc. But we can calculate very nearly what this loss is and make it good at small expense if we do not delay too long. It is much better to feed than to sell hay and straw, because the tax upon the soil is so much less, and whoever does sell these products should surely plan to buy fertilizers to make good his drafts upon the soil. Near cities it is always easy to buy stable manure, and this is ordinarily the most economical. The hay, grain and straw are thus returned, the loss is not only made good but the condition of the land is improving all the time, for this is the natural result of tillage.—American Agriculturist for April.

Editor Dana on Etiquette.

If a person passes you the butter it is always proper to say "Thank you." Or if a person agrees to grant any simple request of yours, it is proper and appropriate to say "Thank you." But there are occasions when this or perhaps any other verbal expression would be unnecessary, if not absolutely inexcusable.

If, in response to a passionate and earnest appeal to a young woman that she should illuminate your dismal loneliness, enlighten your bachelor inexperience, and assist your solitary helplessness by bestowing her confiding self upon you, and placing her future happiness in your guardianship, she should say "Yes," and you should then say "Thank you," the chances are she would throw the whole thing up. Such a reply would knock the bottom out of an almost unfathomable sentiment. A man who would receive a young woman's hand with the same expression with which he would acknowledge a butter-dish, or the receipt of a blown-off hat, could not appreciate the real value of a woman's love. The proper response to such a priceless gift is made with the eyes, the arms, perchance the lips, but words are out of place.—New York Sun

A Typical American Boy.

There is a farmer boy over in Phelps who is indeed a model of industry, and is bound to make a sterling citizen. He is 17 years of age. His father died two years ago, leaving a wife and four children and a mortgage of $1,800 on the farm. The boy was the oldest of the children, and the funeral was scarcely past before he set resolutely to work to help the family out of their financial embarrassment. With the advice of a [illegible] neighbor he has since been the [illegible] manager of the farm of over 90 [illegible]. He has, with only a little assistance, plowed the fields, sowed, cultivated, [illegible]; he has had sole charge of [illegible] number of cattle and horses [illegible] he had managed a retail [illegible] was to test every day how much "sass" he would take before he broke out and left the reservation.

One time old Mr. Grayson was sick, and a substitute took the school for a few weeks. The substitute was a mild-looking man, of middle age, somewhat bald, with a thin neck, sandy complexion, a meek voice and padlock whiskers. Not a boy of us was afraid of such a looking man as that; still, Bennie Gibbs, as usual, took the field for a reconnoissance the first morning. First he dropped a book on the floor. Then he dropped his slate. Then he pushed the big dictionary off the table. Then he whispered. Then he left his seat without permission. Then he slammed the door like an earthquake when he went into the recitation room. Then he whistled once. Then he mewed softly, like a cat. Then he whined like a dog. Then he said "Ma'am! very loudly and pertly when the new teacher spoke to him very mildly, and we all laughed ourselves tired. Then Bennie coughed like an old man.

Then it was time for recess, and the new teacher looked at his watch and told us to put away our books, and then he tiptoed down the aisle to Bennie Gibbs' seat. He took Bennie by both shoulders, and churned him up for a while, and then he shook him until Bennie's hair began to fly out, and then he bent over the shrinking lad and wore out an ebony ruler on him. Then he said in a meek, timid way, "the school may have recess" and touched the bell for us to go out. We walked out like boys walking to their own executions.

When Bennie Gibbs could command his feelings, he said; "Boys, there's one point beyond which it isn't safe to go with this follow, but he's so sneakin' mean about it you can't tell whether it is droppin' the grammar or sayin' ma'am, but it it's somewhere along in that list."

That night Mr. Gibbs went to see the teacher about it, and that meek man beat him with a chair leg until he had to be put to bed. You never saw such a man. He wasn't afraid of anybody. One day he put the President of the Board of Education out of the schoolroom because he criticised the way the new man taught long division.

This teacher, whose name was Moses H. Meeker, went into the Union army soon after the war broke out, and when one of our old boys, George Slocum, a Missouri boy, who had gone into the Rebel army and was serving under Price, heard that Meeker was in Grierson's cavalry, he deserted and came North and shot off three fingers of his right hand to avoid the draft. He said as soon as he heard that old Meeker had enlisted he knew the South had no chance. Meeker is a preacher now. He has been preaching in the same church for eighteen years, and never had but one row with the choir. That was the first Sunday he preached, and they say that, if he ordered that choir to sing the long meter doxology to "Amsterdam" or "Silver Street," they'd do it if it burst the organ.—R. J. Burdette in Brooklyn Eagle.

THE PROPER THING.

Fawn-color will be a favorite for dressy jackets.

For small mantles of wool stuff the sling-sleeve cape will be used.

Serges and canvas cloths in checks and plaids will be used for tailor dresses.

Walking suits for spring are to be trimmed with cloth arabesques in cut-work.

For traveling are long, loose cloaks of brown wool canvas, lined with gay striped surahs.

A feature in summer dresses will be to have little bunches of picot-edged ribbons in clusters at the throat and waist.

White gauze veils are very much worn by those who wish to protect their complexions from the cutting winds.

Dark green cloth covert coats with double breasted front and turned down collar covered with velvet will be very fashionable for spring.

Mantles for early spring are of scarf shape with the back merely a round cape barely reaching the waist line, and long slender mantilla fronts.

Polonaises are the present and the coming favorites for making up cashmere dresses. The princess style, with "crossover" front, fastening to one side and well defining the figure, is the one preferred.

Girls not yet in their teens, when put into mourning, wear entire dresses of black but a short time, when they are dressed in mixed stuffs, such as black and white shepherd's check, striped and checked ginghams, and gray serges and Cheviots trimmed with black.

SPARKS FROM THE RAILS.

What the Employes of the Central-Hudson Railroad Have to Say About Dr. Pardee's Remedy.

Rochester, May 28, 1886.

Pardee Medicine Co.

GENTS:—I desire to express to you something of my feelings of gratitude for what your remedy has done for me. For fifteen years I have suffered greatly with neuralgia. At times the pain has been so intense that death would have been a welcome relief. It affected my eyes to such an extent that for a time I was totally blind and gave up all hope of recovery, no treatment I could procure affording me even temporary relief. I have used Dr. Pardee's Rheumatic Remedy for several months and to-day I am as well and as free from all neuralgic pains as when a boy.

Dr. Pardee's Rheumatic Remedy has cured me and I am positive it will cure any case of neuralgia or rheumatism, and I shall recommend it to all.

I would not again suffer what I have for five thousand dollars.

Yours respectfully, D. W. MILLER,
Engineer, N. Y. C. & H. R. R.

The Two Glasses.

There were two glasses, filled to the brim
On a rich man's table, rim to rim.
One was ruddy and red as blood,
And one was clear as the crystal flood.

Said the glass of wine to the paler brother,
"Let us tell the tales of the past to each other.
I can tell of banquet and revel and mirth,
And the proudest and grandest souls on earth
Fell under my touch as though struck by blight
Where I was king, for I ruled in might;
From the heads of kings I have torn the crown;
From the heights of fame I have hurled men down.
I have blasted many an honored name;
I have taken virtue and given shame;
I have tempted youth with a sip, a taste,
That has made his future a barren waste.
Far greater than a king am I,
Or than any army beneath the sky.

"I have made the arm of the driver fail,
And sent the train from the iron rail.
I have made good ships go down at sea,
And the shrieks of the lost were sweet to me,
For they said, behold how great you be!
Fame, strength, wealth, genius before you fall,
For your might and power are over all.
Ho! ho! pale brother," laughed the wine,
"Can you boast of deeds as great as mine?"

Said the water glass "I can not boast
Of a king dethroned or a murdered host,
But I can tell of heart once sad,
By my crystal drops made light and glad—
Of thirsts I've quenched, of brows I've laved,
Of hands I've cooled and souls I've saved;
I've leaped through the valley, dashed down the mountain,
Flowed in the river and played in the fountain,
Slept in the sunshine and dropped from the sky,
And everywhere gladdened the landscape and eye.

"I have eased the hot forehead of fever and pain
I have made the parched meadows grow fertile with grain;
I can tell of the powerful wheel of the mill
That ground our flour and turned at my will,
I can tell of manhood, debased by you,
That I lifted up and crowned anew.
I cheer, I help, I strengthen and aid;
I gladden the heart of man and maid;
I set the wine-chain captive free,
And all are better for knowing me.

These are the tales they told each other—
The glass of wine and its pale brother—
As they sat together, filled to the brim,
On the rich man's table, rim to rim.

THE PROPER THING.

Shepherd's plaids are again in favor.

There is a revival of the old-time moire antique.

Cashmere over gros grain will be worn again for spring toilettes.

There are fewer whole birds seen on hats and bonnets this spring.

Pompadour silks are recommended for dressy frocks for young girls.

Many of the dressy new hats and bonnets are trimmed entirely with ribbon.

Long flots of ribbon give decorative effect to black and colored lace over dresses.

Colored lace handkerchiefs will be much used for trimming colored straw bonnets.

Bengalines, which are simply a French improvement on Irish poplins, grow in popular favor.

Apple green and chestnut bronze are the favorites among the many combinations of green and brown.

The India silks and foulards have single, long-stemmed flowers strewn at wide intervals on light grounds.

A novelty in summer silks is Bengaline with small reps. It comes in plain colors, stripes, checks and plaids.

Long scarf draperies shirred or pleated at the hip and ending in a point below, are features of new cashmere dresses.

Colored chemisettes of India silk, surah or nuns' veiling, are worn inside the open neck and revers of various dresses.

Cashmere basques have their edges corded with the cashmere. Silk basques are plainly faced or are piped with silk or velvet.

Women who have long throats have adopted a pretty fashion of wearing a wide velvet band about the throat, edged on each side with Roman pearls.

There is greater variety in bonnet ribbons this season than ever. Every old-style ribbon seems to have been revived by the French and American manufacturers.

Heliotrope, which includes all shades of purple from mauve to violet, is the rage. Costumes, bonnets, stockings, corsets and silk underwear are in all shades of it.

When there is no waistcoat the corsage is almost invariably draped with lace, surah, foulard, crepe, or China silk, or made decorative with some kind of a plastron fichu of velvet, plush or some other dressy stuff.

Odd Things in China.

The highest ambition of a Chinese gentleman is to have a nice coffin and a fine funeral.

They feed their friends sumptuously when dead, but let them take care of themselves the best they could while alive.

Old women instead of the young are the idle belles of society.

The highest recommendation a man can have is the fact of his having a wife.

A bachelor is likened to a counterfeit coin; he is looked upon with suspicion even by members of his own household.

Love making is only done three days after marriage. It is not only considered the safest way to get ahead of a rival, but the surest way to get a wife without losing much time.

A previous acquaintanceship between the male and the female prevents their marriage. For this reason a man seldom weds a girl of his own town. They are likewise prevented from marrying kins or namesakes. Joneses are not allowed to marry Joneses nor Smiths to marry Smiths.

A girl is never considered anything else in her own father's home but an honored guest. She is neither responsible for the family's debts nor enjoys a share in its fortunes, as in the case of sons.

Daughters depend upon their husbands for fame and fortune, while sons depend upon their parents and upon themselves.

A man could borrow money on the strength of his having a son, but no one would advance him a cent if he had a dozen daughters. The former is responsible for the debts of his father for three generations. The latter is only responsible for the debts of her own husband.

When a Chinaman meets another he shakes and squeezes his own hands; covers his head. If great friends had no seen each other for long time, after the mutual hand-shaking they would rub shoulders until they become tired. Instead of asking each other's health they would say: "Have you eaten your rice, where are you going, what is your business when you get there, how old are you, and how much did you pay for your shoes!

Men wear long petticoats and carry fans, while the women wear short jackets and carry canes.

Boats are drawn by horses, carriages moved by sails.

Old men play balls and fly kites, while children fold their arms and look on.

Schoolmasters have more power over young than parents. If within three years schooling the child is not morally as well as intellectually reformed he is sent into another school.

Parents and spectators instead of the children are held responsible for crimes committed by the latter.

"It is better to be ignorant and know how to live than to be learned and not know how to live. The principal object of a school is to learn how to live in tranquility and happiness and nothing else." So say all Chinese scholars.

It is much lesser crime to steal your neighbor's ox than his dog. The former is simply personal property while the latter takes the place of a man—watch man.

If a Chinaman desires the death of an enemy he goes and hangs himself upon his neighbor's door. It is a sure cure to kill not only that particular enemy, but members of his entire family will be in jeopardy of losing their lives.

When a Chinaman desires a visitor to dine with him he does not ask him to do so, but when he does not wish him to stay he puts the question, "Oh, please stay and dine with me!" The visitor will then know he is not wanted.

A rich man's servant gets no salary, yet many are the applicants; while big salaries are paid to the servants of the common people but few make applications. The perquisites of the former are often more than triple the salaries of the latter, are the sole reasons for these differences.

When a Chinaman expects a present and it does not come he sends one of lesser value.

To encourage honesty and sincerity, confidential clerks and salesmen in all branches of industries receive an annual net percentage of the firm's business besides their regular salaries.—Wong Chin Foo in Philadelphia Herald.

RETRIBUTION.

BY "THE DUCHESS."

CHAPTER XV.

If the idea that he looked startled and turned pale on seeing her at first suggested itself to Nadine, it is speedily routed. Mr. Annerley, coming up to her, holds out his hand with quite a beaming smile.

"You! It is not one of your days, surely," he says.

His tone is crisp, abrupt; in another man it might be called flurried. A long, light overcoat covers him from his neck to his boots. Even though she cannot see the clothes beneath, some sudden fancy strikes Nadine that he is slightly en fete. This idea, too, however, is put to flight before it has time to harden on her brain.

"No. It is not one of my days, but"——

She is so astonished at seeing him here in Mrs. Brand's house, that she finds a difficulty in speaking quickly or freely.

"You are going," interrupts he, shortly, "so am I. Come."

He opens the hall door as he speaks, and motions to her to precede him. It is all done in a moment. If he had meant to get her out of the house with a speed that admitted of no delay, he could not have done it more promptly. Still devoured with surprise at his presence in Park Lane, Nadine forgets to comment upon this, even in her thoughts, until long afterward.

As they leave Mrs. Brand's house behind them Annerley's manner undergoes a change. It loses its briskness, and returns to its usual calm habit.

"But you—perhaps you did not want to come away so soon," says Nadine, in a low bewildered tone.

What could a city clerk want in Mrs. Brand's house at that hour?

"Yes; I was quite ready. My business was finished," returns he, steadily.

"Your business? Business with Mrs. Brand?"

"And very serious business! So serious that it is conducted as secretly as possible."

"It has to do with your—your—firm?" asks she, in an awed tone.

"With—my firm? Yes. I was sorry you met me here. It is of the utmost consequence that my comings and goings at that house should be kept dark."

He glances at her keenly as he speaks.

"You need not be afraid," says Nadine, quietly. "I shall say nothing of it. I shall not mention having met you. You may be at rest about that. But I confess I am amazed—astonished!"

"Come in here. It is a fine evening. A walk will do you good, and—I have something to say to you."

Entering the principal entrance to the park, they stroll together in silence—pass the row, the drive, the last touch of humanity in the shape of lifeguardsmen and nursery maids, until they find themselves in a dull, out of the way spot, and virtually speaking alone.

"Yes; I am more surprised than I can tell you," says Nadine again, pausing to look into his face. "To meet you there! And this secret business—I hope it means no harm to Millicent—Miss Grey?"

"None at all, I assure you." He laughs easily. "I shall not harm Miss Grey. My business, so far as she is concerned, will very soon be at an end."

"Then she is mixed up with it."

"Well, yes."

"Paul," says Nadine, leaning forward and speaking in a low tone, "I think I have guessed it. It—it has something to do with—her sapphires."

An extraordinary gleam flashes across Mr. Annerley's features. It is momentary, but brilliant. Fear, suspicion and something stronger still are blended in it. It may be that he is disconcerted at having his "business" with Mrs. Brand thus publicly put into words. To be discovered, no matter how innocent the offense, is disagreeable to most.

"You are not pleased that I have found it out?" suggests Nadine, timidly. "But do not let it distress you. I shall bury the knowledge in my heart. No one shall be the wiser for it."

"You will do well to do so," says Annerley, recovering himself with an effort. "You will take care also not to let it be known by word or glance that you met me to-night at Mrs. Brand's. Much depends upon your faithfulness in this matter."

"Then you have found a clew to the thief? You are on his track?" asks she, breathlessly.

"Yes; there is a clew." He pauses a moment, looking down into her eyes as though he would read her very soul. "Swear to me you will not mention having met me to-night," he says at last, in a low, vehement tone.

His intensity frightens her.

"There is no need for it. I have promised; but if you wish it, yes—I swear not to reveal our having met," she answers, nervously. "Was it this you wished to say to me, Paul?"

"This—and something else. But first"——

He breaks off abruptly, and laying his hands upon her shoulders, turns her so he can see her better. He has been gazing at her intently, and the extreme beauty of her flower like face, enhanced by the touch of timidity his stern voice and manner have brought into it, has set on fire the love that already burns brightly in his bosom. She is the one solitary thing on earth that he cares for—the one human creature he adores with a passion, wild, ungovernable, that sometimes from the very strength of it makes even him tremble. If he should lose her! The very idea makes the blood rush tumultuously to his head. And there is that to be said to her to-night that—But she will not fail him—she shall not!

"Nadine!" exclaims he, in a suppressed tone—low, vehement. "Tell me that you love me! I have loved you so well that I will not believe you have given me no return. All my heart—nay, my very soul, is yours to save or ruin, as you will. Is such devotion to go unrewarded? See! I am waiting—trembling before you as the veriest leaf that grows, lest your word fail me. Does not this touch you? Are you insensible, heartless? Well, then! if you cannot from your heart say that you love me, at least tell me that your heart is empty—that you are indifferent to all the world."

He waited breathlessly. But as the waiting lengthens a dark frown gathers on his brow, and a savage expression curves his lips. Nadine, faint, terrified, and still with that terrible numbness overpowering her, draws back a step or two and presses her hand convulsively against her face. Annerley, laying his hands upon her shoulders, gives her a violent shake. A low cry escapes her. This cry releases her from the nervous bondage in which she has been held.

"Speak, girl!" cries he roughly. "It is true you never yet told me that you love me. Am I now to learn that you have made that confession to another man?"

"Oh! no! no!" The assurance falls from her with a fervor which he places to a wrong account. With a passionate thankfulness she tells herself that she can at least answer this last question with truth. To no man has she said, "I love you."

"Ah!" says Annerley, drawing a long breath of [illegible], "that is well for [illegible]

[illegible]

he sighs heavily, and still regards her with a lowering brow. "Now for my news," he says.

"To-morrow. Will not to-morrow do?" asks she, faintly, feeling tired and overdone.

"To-morrow I shall probably be out of town. Yes," answering her glance of surprise. "I shall be abroad for a week or two—on business."

"The same business?" demands she, eagerly.

"You're a wonderful guesser," returns he. There is a vague suggestion of a sneer in his smile. "Before going, however, I want to tell you that a stroke of luck has at last fallen at my feet. To-day the—my—my chief sent for me and offered me a—a higher stool in the office, in fact"——

He hesitated a good deal, and seems indeed singularly ignorant of the proper terms to be used with regard to his rise in his position.

"I am very glad," says Nadine, in her clear, cold, girlish voice, so devoid of real interest.

"This rise will enable me to marry," continues he, watching her closely. She is evidently aware of his scrutiny, because her face remains impassive, even while her fingers interlace each other and grow into a clasp that leaves her knuckles white. She nods her head softly in answer to his remark, not trusting herself to speak.

"But it will take me out of town." He is watching her still narrowly. But this time she manages to meet his gaze. If, indeed, her fate is to marry this man, and go with him wheresoever he goes, then it will be only kind of fortune to drive them into the country, far from this great London, where one meets every one, and where those known to her in her present life might sometimes (cruel thought) be seen by her.

"Well?" she says.

"It will take me out of the country. The fact is," continues he, rushing at the rest of his communication, "I have been offered a post of—of trust that will take me to America."

"You go there in search of this man who has stolen the sapphires?" says she, quickly. "You are hunting him down. Is this your post of trust? Are you a—a detective?"

Something like a vague smile flits across his face as he notices how she shrinks from him.

"Not exactly." His tone is full of mystery. "If detectives are abhorrent to you, be happy in the thought that I have nothing in common with them; that, in fact, I detest them quite as much as you do. No; I am going there in advance of the detectives, as I hope. You'll be ready to come with me?"

"Is it to be soon?"

"It may sound soon to you, perhaps. In about a month from to-day." It is now growing toward the end of July. "But I may have to start earlier than that. You will be ready?"

He is very pale as he presses the question. If she refuses—if she even bargains for more time, it will cause confusion. But she does not refuse. A profound sigh escapes her, but she says:

"Yes, I shall be ready," in a voice subdued but void of trembling. If she is to marry him, and thus to resign all good the world can give her, it will make little difference whether she lives with him here or in that far country he has named; then a sudden thought occurring, she looks at him eagerly: "My mother?" she says.

"Will of course accompany us."

"Will your stay there be long?"

"I hardly know—for some years certainly; after that it is undecided."

"Everything is undecided that lies in the years beyond;" she sighs again. "You are going abroad to-morrow, you say?"

"Yes, for a week or two—perhaps three. But I shall be back in time for our wedding."

He attempts to speak lightly, but the sad look on the girl's face checks him. He is, however, too elated by the victory already achieved to know any fear for the future. No doubt she is pining at the thought of leaving her home, but once married to him, the power and persistence of his love will conquer all regrets. So he thinks; so he vainly believes.

"Don't look so grieved, my darling," he whispers fondly, pressing her hand between both his own. "Think of the long and happy future that lies before you, with me forever as your slave. The time will come, Nadine, when you will not regard any ties but the one that binds me to you. Ties of home and kindred will be as naught beside it. Though now, perhaps, you give me your heart unwillingly, then you will love even as you are beloved. Oh, that that glad hour were blended with this!" He presses his lips ecstatically to the hand he still holds. His whole face grows bright with the affection that glows within him. Then one word that he has used returns to him with unpleasant force. "Unwilling," he goes on musingly, frowning slightly. "Yes, you are unwilling to give me your heart."

"Ah, no!" says she gently, and with a troubled air of uncertainty; "I am not unwilling. You mistake me. I would, with all my soul, that I could love you as you desire, and perhaps, indeed, in time"—she hesitates, as though lost in a labyrinth of painful thought. "No, I am not unwilling," she repeats again, feeling how good a thing it would be for her could she indeed obliterate from her mind all the too dear past and give herself entirely to this man. "You speak as though I am obstinately withholding something—as if you believed you were robbing me of the heart on which you set such store. But it is not so. Whatever else you may have stolen, it was not my love. You cannot steal that; but some day, perhaps, I shall give it to you."

Preoccupied as she is with sad and hurtful memory, she is roused to present life by the curious glance and start that follows on her speech. Both are subdued as suddenly as they came, and Annerley once more regards her with only the ardent look of affection that before was his; but Nadine cannot forget that they were there. Has he heard of Mr. Duran? Has Nadine's acquaintance with him come to his ears? Does he suspect Duran of being the thief who has stolen from him his love's heart? She feels a little cold and sick with anxiety as she waits for his next words. They reassure her.

"You give me fresh life," he says. "Some day, indeed, the love I crave shall be mine. And now," glancing at his watch, "I fear our last moment has come. Now I must bid you farewell, until the happy time that will see me home with you, with our near marriage only a few hours distant. Good-by, my darling, my best beloved!"

Not a living soul is in sight. Folding her closely in his arms, he holds her to him as though he could never again suffer her to go. She feels the reality, the wild earnestness of his love at this instant as she never before realized it. Softened, subdued by it, she gently returns his embrace, and then stands back from him.

"You will think of me—kindly, lovingly?" breathes he with passionate entreaty. "Sweetheart! if you could only know how hard it is to part from you for even these few days! Nadine, have pity on me, and try to love me in my absence. They say 'absence makes the heart grow fonder,' prove the saying true. Alas! how fatally honest your sweet eyes can be. [illegible]

[illegible] in all our years on earth [illegible] move you? Why, no! You look bewildered, but not sad. It is the last moment! I cannot see you again to-night—because—because of—. Never mind that. Good-by, my pretty girl!"

Once again he folds her in his arms. Once again he passionately presses his lips to hers.

He releases her.

"This fear of mine is folly," he whispers heavily. "It is but for a week or two. We shall meet again, to know no other parting—save death!"

He guides her quickly on her backward way to where again the gates loom large and dark. Into a cab outside he puts her, lays his face for an instant against her palm, and then is lost among the growing mists of the night.

Now, and only now, Nadine remembers how she had forgotten to tell him of the projected visit to Valworth Park!

CHAPTER XVI.

A sweeping lawn; broad terraces; far away as the eye can see a gleaming, swaying ocean. Behind the lawn a background of giant firs that blot out the sky in that direction, and throw into brilliant relief the white clad figures darting to and fro upon the tennis ground.

Gerald Massareene, having lost his game, flings his racket to the winds, and throws himself prone at the feet of Nadine Roche.

"Pretty place, eh?" says he. "Soothing to the nerves after the town fever!" Then looking at her and marking the extreme repose of her bearing, that almost borders upon lassitude, he says gently, "Tired?"

"No."

She brightens up with an effort and smiles at him in her kindest fashion. Her thoughts are tangled—her mind perturbed. Both are far from the busy scene before her. A sense of despair, of inability to move in the path that stretched out so temptingly to her view, has saddened her eyes and given a mournful curve to her beautiful mouth. Her days passed here with Maurice Duran have been infinitely sweeter to her than ever she had dreamed they might be. The very nearness of their companionship had had its charm, and though no word of love had come from his lips, still, eyes can speak when words are forbidden; and though honor renders one dumb, who can prevent the sense of gladness that comes with the touch of one beloved?

Sweet days! too sweet to last—and swift as sweet. A whole fortnight has gone by—two weeks crowded with such exquisite recollections as will (unhappily cling to her for all her life. And now it is the 16th—to-morrow will be the night of the grand ball, given in honor of Capt. Boyle's birthday, who is expected to arrive about an hour before it opens, and then— Another cruelly blissful week, perhaps, and after that a return to town, and—a hurried wedding! Then exile from all that has made life not only endurable but perfect.

Sometimes a thought of Paul Annerley has crossed her mind, but, as a rule, she has resolutely put all remembrance of him far from her. She had told herself that this one holiday at least should be her own. Afterward let oblivion, let misery come, but just for these few happy days she would let utter joy hold sway. She had heard nothing of her future husband since her departure, and if at times it had occurred to her as strange that he had not written to her from those foreign cities, whither his search of the robber of the famous sapphires led him, the sense of relief in not having to write to him swallowed up all such wonder.

"How should I feel tired?" she says now, smiling at Gerald Massareene, who has become quite a friend of hers.

He has found in her an ally—a certain partisan, who derides the notion of Millicent's ever consenting to fulfill her loveless engagement to Capt. Boyle while her heart is given to another. That other, now stretched at the pretty partisan's feet, is quite willing to accept her reading of the situation. Though Millicent herself has been somewhat difficult to understand, a little vague in her answers, a trifle willful, in a degree—a marked degree—averse to being brought to the point, still Mr. Massareene is inclined to believe in the creed of his pretty confidante when she declares herself ready to affirm publicly her belief in the constancy of his fair, if rather trying, love.

"Well, I'm glad you are not," says he pleasantly, alluding to her assertion that she knows no fatigue. "To-night there will be an influx of guests, ordered, like the supper, for to-morrow night, and it would not do to be in poor form. You look pale, however."

"Are many coming?" "Enough to make us put on our best bib and tucker and our choicest manners. You will have to make your very best bow to the lord lieutenant of the county, and to smirk at a youthful if very famous general. The only thing to be careful about is not to overdo it to-night; to remember that the morrow will bring the big Nautch, and to reserve some smiles for the hero of the hour."

He speaks with some bitterness.

"To-morrow night will bring Capt. Boyle." She looks at him softly out of her serene eyes. "Do not let that make you unhappy. His presence means less than nothing. Indeed, I believe it will do your cause good."

"Sweet prophetess! I would I dared share your creed."

"What creed?" asks Duran, who has joined them unseen.

"A belief Miss Roche has in the unconquerable power of love," replies Massareene gayly, springing to his feet and crossing the close turf to where he can see Millicent standing, for once, alone.

"And so you believe in love's omnipotency," says Duran, gazing at Nadine with calm searching eyes. "You?"

"There is surprise in your tone—and doubt. Why should I not hold such a creed?" returns she steadily, though her lips have grown very pale.

"I cannot answer that here. Will you come with me to the Firwood? I shall not keep you long, and I must speak to you. Do not refuse me, Nadine. This is probably the last hour we shall ever have together. I leave the park the day after to-morrow."

She had shrunk a little from him when first he appealed to her, but as his pleading grew stronger, more impassioned, she rose. With her eyes downcast, and her color faded to a pallor that bespoke an anguished heart, she moved beside him to the wood he had mentioned.

Presently they enter it. The eternal greenness of it stirs her blood once more to an admiration that rouses her and compels her return to the immediate present. Ever since she had obeyed his word, and risen and followed him hither, she had been in a kind of waking dream that had been too sweet to permit her desire for its dissolution. Now, however, that she is fully awake to her danger as well as to her pain, it is too late to withdraw from a tete-a-tete that she feels must give her grief.

Duran, stopping abruptly beneath the spreading branches of a huge Scotch-fir, lays his hand upon her arm [illegible]

"If love be indeed [illegible], how is it that I have failed?" he asks in a low tone [illegible]

eyes are full of a reproach—mute, but so terrible that his heart grows warm within him. Alas! how clearly in those melancholy eyes is her pure love lying.

"It is true, then! I have your love," he says, always in a low voice, but none the less ecstatically; "and if so, my dearest, why will you repulse me? Ah! have pity on me, if you will not on yourself! Think—think before you sacrifice us both to a mistaken sense of duty."

"I have given my word," says Nadine—"my promise."

"A word—a promise—better broken. See here, my love, I have lived many years longer than you. Too many," he says after a pause, that is filled with regret for those past hours when he had not known her, and when another had borne his name—another unloved and undesired. "I cannot bear to think what years lie between your birthday and mine; but still my very age gives me the right to speak. Is it good that you should surrender all your happiness to one for whom you have no real regard, just because you once gave him a hope to that effect? Nay, there is no loyalty in that. Better let him go than live to repent the bargain he has made."

"There is my word," persists she, meekly but earnestly. "I cannot take that back; and he, too, loves me. He loves me so well," declares she with an intuition that has revealed to her the real passion of the man whom she has promised to marry, "that I think it would kill him did I now prove false."

"You are very tender toward him!" exclaims he bitterly. "But of me? how is it with me? No, I shall not die; I am not made of such brittle stuff as this other lover of yours. I shall probably live, even though you forsake me; but what of my life? is it to be all barren—all wasted? Have you no pity left for me!"

"Alas! is it kind to torture me?" says she, with such a forlorn glance as once more reduces him to a forgetfulness of self, and to the old passionate regret for her.

"It is kind. If my cruelty can rescue you from the Slough of Despond into which you now are drifting it is more than kind. What! will you live out all your fresh young life without a joy—all hope? Nadine, I implore you to pause."

"It is too late." She lays her palms upon her bosom and regards him with blanched cheeks. "Oh! if I had only met you sooner; but now—now"——

"Your words are an acknowledgment of your love for me" cries he, casting his arms about her. "I will surrender you to no man. Nadine! Beloved! Do not shrink from me—do not seek to unloose my arms."

"I must," sobs she vehemently. "Have I not told you that all this comes too late? I—I am to be married in a fortnight."

It is his turn to shrink, to pale. He opens his arms instinctively, and lets her draw back from him with quivering lips, and trembling limbs that almost refuse to support her.

"I will not believe it," he says at last hoarsely. "A fortnight To give yourself body and soul to one for whom you are caring nothing—in a fortnight! Child! Darling! Say it is not true."

"I cannot!" She has buried her face in her hands.

"And that is a woman's honor—a woman's honesty," says he, pacing to and fro upon the mossy sward with a disturbed brow, and lips stern and compressed. "Do you think this man will thank you for the empty casket you are offering him? The body without the soul would be to me worthless. Who shall say he does not think as I do? Come"—stopping short before her and gazing at her fixedly—"tell me the name of this city clerk who stands between us! If you will do nothing toward the untying of a knot that may ruin three lives, I will."

"Paul Annerley."

"But do not pursue this matter," she says eagerly, going a step or two nearer to him and laying her hand upon his arm. "Do not, I implore you!"

"I shall pursue it until the iniquitous [illegible]

He might perhaps have misjudged her, and have believed her already wedded in heart to Annerley, but for her concluding words. But these, and the melancholy light in her large eyes, reassure him of the truth that in reality she is altogether his. There is, however, so keen a sense of weariness in her attitude and expression that he resolves on refraining from further argument.

"Well," he says, with an attempt at lightness that does not deceive her, "we have said enough for to-day, and you look tired. Come, let me take you home. Remember there will be a large addition to our party to-night, and of course you will like to look your best."

"I will go back to the house when you have promised me one thing," returns she, steadily; "that you will not seek Paul Annerley for four days from this. Give me these four days."

She is trembling with excitement, and her eyes are full of tears that will not be repressed. Four days. To-day—to-morrow; these two cannot be avoided. Were she to leave now, before to-night's dinner—that is but a herald of to-morrow night's ball, when Capt. Boyle is expected, to grace his own birthday entertainment—it would be regarded as nothing less than an act of discourtesy by her kindly hostess. But the day after she might leave; Paul by that time will surely be returned to town—and her (bitter thought!)—and she can easily so manage as to prevent a meeting between him and Mr. Duran.

"The four days you crave are yours," replies Duran gravely, noting the fever in her eyes. "Now, in turn, concede me a gratification. Let me accompany you back to the park."

(To be Continued.)

Almost a Miracle.

Reuben Severance, of Upper Stillwater, [Town of Old Town, Maine] has been, perhaps, one of the most talked about men in Eastern Maine for the past six months. The cause of Mr. Severance's notoriety was the publication of the facts concerning his restoration to health and strength after he had been abandoned by physicians to die and had, himself given up all hope of life. The facts in the case of Mr. Severance were stated to the proprietors of Brown's Sarsaparilla by Mr. Severance's son, who is a citizen of Bangor, and were published in the Daily Commercial. The publication immediately attracted widespread attention and interest but was generally regarded with incredulity as containing statements too marvelous for belief. Among those who took a deep interest in the case was Hon. D. F. Davis, Collector of the Port of Bangor, and ex-Governor of the State, who was an intimate friend of the late W. H. Brown, M. D., who had often spoken to him and to Chief Justice Peters, another of his particular friends, of the time he had devoted to bringing to its present perfection the great remedy which has immortalized his name. One summer evening a party, including Mr. Davis, and Mr. Warren, of the Brown's Sarsaparilla Company, drove out to the residence of Mr. Severance to learn from his own lips the story of his sickness and cure. In order to place the matter beyond dispute Mr. Severance's statement was put in writing and sworn to before Mr. Davis, who is a prominent lawyer and a Justice of the peace. After describing the growth of the tumor and the other manifestations of impure blood and disordered circulation which grew with its growth, Mr. Severance says in his sworn statement:

I finally was obliged to abandon work entirely and took to my bed. I abandoned hope and prayed for death to relieve my sufferings. Physicians examined me and said that nothing could relieve me but the cutting out of the tumor, and the chances were that I would die under the operation. The risk they believed to be too great to justify it. At that time I commenced taking BROWN'S SARSAPARILLA as a kind of forlorn hope. I experienced an immediate change for the better, my appetite returned, food ceased to trouble me, the ringing noises left my head, and best of all the tumor began to shrivel up and disappear. It is now and has been for some time entirely gone. I feel 25 years younger than I did a year ago; my general health has never been better. I can and do work from morning to night and enjoy being able to do so. Only two or three days ago I worked in the hay field all day mowing heavy grass. I say God bless the man who invented this medicine. He should wear a crown. I mean always to keep a bottle of BROWN'S SARSAPARILLA by me while I live.
(Signed) REUBEN SEVERANCE.

Mrs. Severance also made the following sworn statement: The above statement made by my husband, Reuben Severance, regarding his sickness, cure and present condition is true in every particular.
MARY SEVERANCE.

The following statement was signed at the time by a number of prominent citizens of the town, including Frank Hamblen, the postmaster: We, the undersigned, citizens of Upper Stillwater, (Town of Old Town Me.) have known Reuben Severance several years; have known of his illness as above stated by him and know that he has been cured. We believe him to be entirely reliable in any statement which he may make on this or any other subject.

Tumors are only one, and perhaps the least common, of the symptoms by which impure blood, imperfect digestion and disordered circulation make their baneful influence manifest. Brown's Sarsaparilla has incontestibly proven itself to be the greatest remedy for these disorders which medical skill has ever devised.

Warning No. 1.

Since January 1st there had been no use for fire hydrants until the fire of last Thursday evening, then they were needed. We do not pretend to say that if the hydrant near Dilts' foundry could have been utilized by the hose companies as soon as they reached there, the fire could have been extinguished with scarcely any damage. We have it however, from what should be the best authority, that if this state of affairs had existed, the upright part of the foundry could probably have been saved. At the least calculation, ten minutes elapsed between the time that two streams could have been secured from the hydrant and the time that streams were obtained from the steamers. It is true that streams were obtained from the paper mill and the knife factory owing to their proximity to the fire, but this ttate of things will not always exist, nor in this instance were they as effectual as the streams from the hydrants would have been, as the hose was defective. It is an instance of "Penny wise and pound foolish" for the people not to exert themselves in endeavoring to secure a contract with the water works company, and it is to be hoped that the present board will act with judgment in this matter. The water works company have asked that a committee be appointed to investigate the matter and ascertain if they can afford to supply water for fire and other village purposes at a less figure than it was supplied as last year. It is expected that the present board will take some action. It is due the people as well as the water works company that something be done.

Exempt Firemen.

Many firemen who have served five years in a voluunteer fire fire department having received their cirtificates think that they are exempt from jury duty.

If they will take pains to examine subdivision 9 of section 1 of chapter 55 laws of 1886, they will see that they are not exempt from jury duty (even in justice's courts) unless they have obtained a certificate of exemption from either the chief engineer of the fire department or the president of the village, acknowledged by such officer in like manner as a deed, or sworn to by affidavit, accompanied with a notice endorsed thereon and signed by said fireman, that he claims exemption from jury duty for a period specified there in (not limited) and filed said certificate and notice in the office of the county clerk. Blanks can be obtained of the chief engineer, by any exempt fireman desiring to avail himself of the benefit of this law.

A Lively Suit at Law in Phœnix.

The village of Phoenix was stirred up to a considerable extent yesterday by the trial of a case of ejectment involving leading people of the community. The plaintiff was Mrs. A. J. Mr. Ross has lived in the house since May 1, 1885, without renewal of his lease. Owing to some disagreement which did not crop out of the proceedings, Mrs. Hamill sought to stay her tenant's stay there. He refused to go on demand and also when ejectment processes were taken advantage of. It was the trial of these which occurred yesterday before Justice S. C. The people of North Hannibal are hoping that if the industry is established the R. W. & O. R. A Remarkable Case.

Oct. 21st, 1886.

MESSRS. W. H. HOOKER & CO.

Gentlemen—About three years ago my little grandchild (now nearly five years of age) was stricken with Eczema. Beginning in a mild form he slowly but surely became worse until his life was despaired of. Six months ago he had scrofulus looking sores, characteristic of Eczema, completely covering his face and body, effecting his hands to such an extent that his finger nails came off. Such was his alarming condition that it left me little hope of his recovery. I, as a last extremity, resorted to all the remedies advertised as good for Eczema, not only that, have consulted many physicians, including nine weeks treatment at the Oswego Hospital. From this treatment, the very best to be secured in this vicinity, the child derived little or no benefit. I wish to state these facts in detail so you may fully understand (as I do) the remarkable success I have met with in using Dr Acker's Blood Elixir. Added to my own convictions the fact that physicians failed, giving up the case as incurable, I am only happy to assure you that the child owes its life to Dr. Acker's Blood Elixir. He is apparently on the road to entire recovery, in the near future. I cheerfully confirm and attest to the above and believe others (from my statement) suffering, may have reason to believe in the efficacy of this excellent remedy. Very Truly,

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our [illegible]

WASHINGTON, April [illegible], 1887.

The [illegible] sang out from the pulpit of the Metropolitan M. E. church a few evenings ago, while the pastor, Rev. Dr. Newman occupied a place on the floor. It was the annual sale of pews. The first choice was knocked off to a gentleman who was acting as agent for Senator Stanford, the California millionaire, and the latter will pay $180 for the privilege of using it during the coming year. The annual rental of the pew is $100 and the $80 was the premium paid for the first choice.

Two other statesmen (Senator Sawyer and Representative West) took sittings in this church, which is the same that General Grant attended here during all of the eight years that he occupied the White House. About twenty-five of the most desirable pews are exempted from the annual auction, because they were sold outright originally and perpetual deeds were given to the purchaser, who are required to pay only half the yearly rental charged for other pews in the same localities.

There was a great interest in this handsome church just after it was erected, more than twenty years ago. One pew was then purchased by Gen. Berry, of Baltimore, for $5,000, for the use of President Johnson. The latter was not a member of the Metropolitan church, but the General was an admirer of Mr. Johnson's policy, and wanted to do something to testify his approval, while the President expressed his appreciation of the courtesy by occasionally occupying the pew.

The Secretary of War and the Commander-in-chief of the army have never seemed to be in harmony and conflicts of authority between them are becoming common occurrences. While Secretary Endicott was away a short time since, several adjutant appointments were made by cononels, with the approval of Gen. Sheridan, of lieutenants serving with light batteries. The Secretary thought that the adjutants should be selected from among the lieutenants doing actual service with their regiments, in justice to the officers of the regiments. An order was forthwith issued to this effect, and the objectionable appointments were revoked. Gen. Sheridan was out West at the time. No correspondence has taken place between the two officers, and probably none will, but it all goes to show that they do not work well together in administering the affairs of the army.

Speaking of Gen. Sheridan reminds me of the lecturer——not "little Phil," the Lieutenant General, but General Geo. A. Sheridan, who on Wednesday evening, at the Congregational church in this city, took the platform to refute the dogmas of that moral anarchist, Col. Bob Ingersoll. Wit, sarcasm, invective, pathos and eloquence were brought into play with a force and effect that provoked laughter and tears alternately.

"The Modern Pagan" was the lecturer's subject and he opened with a tribute to the fascinating personality of Col. Ingersoll, who, he said, was a fine domestic character, a staunch friend, a loyal citizen, a brilliant lawyer, a wonderful orator, charming by the splendor of his rhetoric and the beauty of his imagination, but who, when he approaches the subject of religion, drops the mantle of his genial personality and becomes the loudest of boasters and the most abject of intellectual cowards.

One of the hardest blows dealt the distinguished Pagan was through a quotation from one of his own lectures. "The concurrent judgment of mankind," said the General, is that their belief in God is the foundation of all truth, and that a man will not call upon his Creator to bear witness to a falsehood. Col. Ingersoll takes another view of it. He "thanks Mother Nature that she has planted sufficient ingenuity in the brain of a child to throw up against the violence of a brutal parent the little breastwork of a lie."

Speaking of the growth of this country and its institutions, of which Col. Ingersoll is one of the beneficiaries, Gen. Sheridan said, "The history of America is simply a grand poem, sounding in immortal numbers the praises of Christianity. The country was discovered by Christians, settled by Christians, Christians declared the independence, fought the battles which established it, formed its institutions, and gave it its universities and hospitals and homes"—and all else that is good.

Some Newspaper Facts.

"A newspaper and newspaper editor that people don't criticise and sometimes abuse, are rather poor concerns. The the man that an editor feels it his duty to defend at the risk of making enemies of another class, are the first to show ingratitude. The editor who expects to receive much charity or gratitude will soon find out his mistake.

"It has been very truly said that when an editor makes a mistake in his paper, all the world sees and calls him a fool. When a private citizen makes a mistake nobody knows it except a few friends, and they come around and ask the editor to keep it out of the paper. When a private citizen dies the editor is asked to write about his good qualities and leave the bad out. When the editor dies the private citizen says: Now that darn liar will get his deserts."

"If your local paper happens to tread on your toes a little in performing its mission don't get your back up and abuse the editor, but stop and take a good breath and think for a season, and see if you can't remember some of the favors and kindness it has shown you in the past. Then reflect that it may not be long before you may want some favor again.

"After you fet upon your ear and make up your mind to stop your paper to make the editor feel humiliated, just poke your finger in water and look for the hole. Then you will know how you are missed. The man who thinks a paper cannot survive without his support ought to go off and stay awhile. When he comes back he will find that half his friends didn't know he was away. The other half didn't care a cent and the world at large hadn't kept any account of his movements whatever. You will probably find some things in your home paper you cannot endorse. Even the Bible is rather plain and hits some hard licks. If you were to get mad and burn your Bible, presses would go on printing them, and if you were to stop your paper, and call the editor all sorts of names, the paper would still be published. And what is more you will sneak around and borrow a copy of it every week from your neighbor. It is much better to keep your vest pulled down and your subscription paid up."—Exchange.

Day and Night

During an acute attack of Bronchitis, a ceaseless tickling in the throat, and an exhausting, dry, hacking cough, afflict the sufferer. Sleep is banished, and great prostration follows. This disease is also attended with Hoarseness, and sometimes Loss of Voice. It is liable to become chronic, involve the lungs, and terminate fatally. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral affords speedy relief and cure in cases of Bronchitis. It controls the disposition to cough, and induces refreshing sleep.

I have been a practicing physician for twenty-four years, and, for the past twelve, have suffered from annual attacks of Bronchitis. After exhausting all the usual remedies

Without Relief,

I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It helped me immediately, and effected a speedy cure.—G. Stoveall, M. D., Carrollton, Miss.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is decidedly the best remedy, within my knowledge, for chronic Bronchitis, and all lung diseases. —M. A. Rust, M. D., South Paris, Me.

I was attacked, last winter, with a severe Cold, which, from exposure, grew worse and finally settled on my Lungs. By night sweats I was reduced almost to a skeleton. My Cough was incessant, and I frequently spit blood. My physician told me to give up business, or I would not live a month. After taking various remedies without relief, I was finally two bottles of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I am now in perfect health, and able to resume business, after having been pronounced incurable with Consumption.— S. P. Henderson, Saulsburgh, Penn.

Cured By Using

For years I was in a decline. I had weak lungs, and suffered from Bronchitis and Catarrh. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral restored me to health, and I have been for a long time comparatively vigorous. In case of a sudden cold I always resort to the Pectoral, and find speedy relief.— Edward E. Curtis, Rutland, Vt.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Bronchitis. The physician attending me became fearful that the disease would terminate in Pneumonia. After trying various medicines, without benefit, he finally prescribed Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which relieved me at once. I continued to take this medicine a short time, and was cured. —Ernest Colton, Logansport, Ind.

NEW YORK LETTER.

Wall Street Gleanings—Dullness of the Market—Effect of the Interstate Law—Steady Sale for Bank Stock—Theatrical Chit Chat—What is Going on—The Possible Erection of Two Theatres—The Latest Advertising Scheme.

[Special to THE TIMES].

Wall street has been remarkably dull during the past few weeks. As a matter of fact none of the Exchanges have shown a very strong market. Wheat, cotton, metal and stocks have held their own and no more. Much of their stagnation in the financial world is due to the uncertainty which rail-road managers feel in trying to determine just what influence the Interstate Commerce law will have on the large interests it is designed to affect. I had a chat with a wellknown financier the other day and he said that in his opinion the measure would serve as a sort of boomerang upon those who favored its passage and that its introducer, Senator Collum would rue the day he brought the measure to light. I know positively that a few of my friends whose business calls them often to cities outside of New York all grumbling on account of the increased rates they must now pay to railroad companies for their passage.

Whether the financial market will recover from its lethargy during the coming week is problem. This much is true that during the next few weeks more than $30,000,000 will be floated on the market in the payment of quarterly dividends on railroad and other stock. That large sum represents upwards of three billions of capitalization. The fact is that this city is simply the financial depository, as it were, for all the great corporations of the country. Here are the chief executive offices. Necessarily so, too, since the officials of a company whose stocks are open to the perverting influences of Wall Street sharpers need to be near the Exchanges and thus head off if possible these schemes. This centralizing of railroad corporations in this city has lead to the erection of huge buildings devoted solely to offices. The Equitable, the Aldrich, the Mills and the Washington buildings are examples of this class. I presume to say that these four buildings represent an investment of six millions and return to their respective owners a net income of more than ten per cent. These buildings are fully occupied with tenants particularly so with the new Equitable and the Mills, At least the Equitable will be when finished.

Speaking of stocks the most desirable securities for permanent investment seem just now to be bank stock and the railroad stocks of roads like the New Haven, the Harlem and the Boston & Albany. These roads show dividends of six to ten per cent. There is no bank stock of a city institution that can be bought for less than ten per cent premium, while the Chemical still holds its high lead of $3,000 for a $100 share. Even the new Western Bank of which Manning, Jordan and Canda are the triune head is offered in the market at 127 and finds ready takers.

Wall street has for several weeks been agitated with rumors of a deal with the Baltimore and Ohio, better know perhaps by the title of the Garrett road. This deal means the consolidation of the B. & O. with roads in the South and Southwest, thereby making a strong combination. It is doubtful whether this is not a little scheme skillfully planned to intimidate small holders of B. & O. stock in order that Mr. Garrett map further strengthen himself in his family possession. So much for Wall Street,

Theatrical gossip is plentiful. The attractions past, present and future are of no mean order. The Bernhardt season has closed, netting $60,000 for the box office, while next Monday night the Patti season of one week in this city begins. Already the sale of seats for the first night mounts up to the magnificent sum of $40,000. The Holy Week is a bad season for managers. Then, too, Barnum and his "Greatest show on earth" draw very largely from the box office of the regular places of amusement.

Two new places of amusement are projected both of which are to be in upper Broadway in the neighborhood of 40th street. There seems to be now, since Booth's Theatre has ceased to exist, no uptown theatre of stage proportions sufficient for spectacular drama. Niblo's in fact is the only regular theatre outside of the Opera House having a large stage. The uptown seems to demand something of this sort and this demand is now to be satisfied. If rumor is to be trusted, Henry E. Abbey is credited with being the managing spirit of this new departure.

Speaking of theatres, the latest in advertising dodges is the sending of poisoned bananas to to Alice Herndon by a rejected admirer, at least so report says. We have had lost jewels by Fanny Davenport, lost poodles by Mary Anderson and now poisoned bananas to Alice Herndon. What the next move will be is hard to tell. Patti has been the object of annihilation by a bomb thrown in a western theatre.

Nat Godwin produced a new sketch in the Bijou, but, poor Nat, what a bad time he hard of it! To produce a new play is something of a task on one's powers, but when the heart is bowed down with grief, how then? The blithesome and cheery Eliza Weatherby is dead. That was her stage name, but to very large circle of friends she was Mrs. Nat Godwin. To her is due Nat's success in the Bijou and the domesticity of Mr. and Mrs. Godwin was a matter of remark in the fraternity. The popular impression seems to be that the married life of members of the theatrical profession is not generally smooth and peaceful. I know of many, very many households, the heads of which are still on the boards, whose domestic life is a pattern to those who regard all theatrical people as beneath them. That felicity is possible and does exist to a marked degree among the theatrical fraternity no one believes more thoroughly than WANDERER.

Captain Foster, the Salvationist, was taken to Auburn prison on Saturday where he will serve out his sentence of two years and four months.

The Street Car Company, which during the winter months have used their 'buses on runners and the old 'buses on wheels commenced, Friday to use their regular street cars. They will probably not be interupted again until snow comes.

The ladies of Zion church, are now prepared to receive orders for all kinds of fancy and plain work. Special attention given to plain sewing. Prices to suit the times. For further particulars apply to Mrs. James Hubbard, President.

C. P. Dutcher of Lower Oswego Falls has his new store on Hannibal street nearly completed. It will be the largest store in Lower Oswego Falls. It is 20 feet front, 60 feet in depth and about 20 feet high. It will be a two story building.

John Porter purchased in Syracuse last Saturday a span of gray, one-half Norman horses. They are five and six years of age and weigh 2,620 pounds. The similarity of their build, weight and color combine to make them the best team that we have seen in this locality. Mr. Porter paid about $500 for them.

The trouble between the Syracuse Exhibition company, (Star Base Ball association,) and John A. Cole has been settled by the acceptance by the latter of an order of $1,250 in cash payable within 30 days, and $500 worth of stock. It is probable that the money will be raised by a series of exhibition games to be played the latter part of this month.

Arrangements are being made for the removal of a knitting mill from Canastota to Phœnix. It is said that employment will thereby be given to thirty-five or forty women. There are ten machines and they will be placed in the third story of the knife factory. The Village Improvement Society was instrumental in obtaining this new industry, having raised $150 to pay for the transportation of the machinery.

The Syracuse common council has voted to put the Salmon river water supply question to the people. William A. Sweet offered to pay the election expenses in case the people voted the project down, and he drew his check for $2,000 for that purpose. In view of an amendment requiring a competent engineer to submit estimates to the people before the election, Mr. Sweet withdrew his offer. The company proposes to have a capital of $3,000,000.

The new board of trustees held their first meeting last Wednesday evening. Ex-president Sharp and ex-trustees Kendrick and Johnson retired with good grace. The newly elected ones were then ready to prevent the seats vacated from getting cold. After a short inaugural address by the president the new board elected N. N. Stranahan clerk and made the Patriot the official paper. Fred Sharp resigned his position as street commissioner and trustee Bradford was appointed to serve until a regular appointment was made which will probably be this evening. As there are a large number of applicants for this office the session is looked forward to with interest. A jailor and several policemen are also to be appointed.

FIRST-CLASS [illegible]

[illegible]

The manner in which poll tax is collected in this village is a subject of much comment and criticism. It is a sort of "go as you please" matter, pay or not pay as you feel disposed. On general principles, if a person who thinks that the street commissioner is after the tax takes a back street to avoid him or puts him off until "next Monday" once or twice he is perfectly safe and pays no poll tax. This is all wrong. It should be: Collect the tax from all on whom it is levied or dispense with it entirely. Street Commissioner Sharp collected from 61 persons and 12 worked it out. Seventy-three is therefore all that paid. These had the privilege of seeing their name in print as they were published in both village papers, but probably seventy-two of the whole number would have been willing to dispense with this honor for one-half that amount. The law now reads: "Every male inhabitant above the age of 21 years excepting all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who lost an arm or leg in the service of the United States during the late war or who is unable to perform manual labor by reason of injuries received or disability incurred in such service, ministers of the gospel, persons seventy years of age, and priests of every denomination, paupers, idiots and lunatics, shall be assessed at least one day."

Unless all except seventy-three in the corporation can be brought into this category, there is something wrong, and something that should be corrected,

India and Ceylon.

The unpleasant weather failed to dampen the ardor of those who desired to hear Mr. G. W. Leitch on Monday evening at the Presbyterion church in his illustrated address on the Life, Habits and Religion of the Hindoos in India and Ceylon. When the time for the address to begin came every seat in the church was filled, while chairs filled the aisles. About eighty photographs were displayed upon a canvas by the Oxy-Hydrogen stereopticon and produced clear cut and most excellent pictures about sixteen feet square. The photographs were procured by the sisters of the lecturer, the Misses Leich who are now missionaries in Ceylon and as produced and explained by Mr. Leich, who has been engaged for several years in mission work in Ceylon were very entertaining and instructive. High cast and low cast, Hindoos, Natives and Missionaries were shown life size and enabled one to form a correct idea of their dress and appearance, while the views in the Manachis temple enabled the audience to form an impression of the gods worshipped and the massiveness of their temples.

The Gardner Block.

Yesterday afternoon the temporary structure that has covered the new block was removed and the new building for the first time was visible. The exterior presents a very fine appearance. It is two stories high, with large plate glass windows on the ground floor and large double windows on the second floor. The sign of C. E. Sackett appears above the entrance to the west part of the building and those of D. C. More & Co. and C. R. Nichols above the east entrance the work of Lester & Worden. In the centre of the block an entrance leads to the upper floor. The stores are commodius being eighty feet deep by about eighteen wide and are lighted by fourteen gas jets. The whole building shows the best of material and excellent workmanship and is a great addition to Oneida street which at the present time is having quite a boom.

Holy Week.

Holy week is the most sacred season of the Christian year, celebrated in every Christian land with utmost solemnity, and ending on Easter day with the highest and greatest festival of the church. Almost the whole story of our Lord's life and death and resurrection seems to be commemorated in the seven days of holy week and easter. Maundy Thursday, so called from the "new commandment," is kept as the anniversary of the institution of the Lord's supper. Good Friday, as the whole world knows, is the anniversary of the crucifixion. From then till the morning of the third day the church keeps vigil, when the easter sun dawns upon a day of joy and feasting, and the Miserere gives place to alleluias and te deums of rejoicing.

[illegible] discovered in the moulding room of Frank Dilts' machine shop and a general alarm given which [illegible]. The fire was first discovered by members of Oswego Hose of Oswego Falls, who were at their hose house and they started across the bridge with their cart. But knowing that under the present arrangement, they did not have the privilege of using the fire hydrants could not do anything, when their services would probably have been worth thousands of dollars.

At the first alarm, the firemen promptly turned out and were at the scene of action. [illegible] a stream was obtained from the Victoria Paper Mills force pumps and shortly after another from the Taylor Bros. foundry but in both instances they were ineffectual as the hose belonging to these firms were not able to stand the pressure and were burst in several places. Both steamers were soon on the field and had streams in short order, No. 1 getting the first. Four streams were now being thrown from the two streams and one each from the paper mills and knife factory but the fire had the advantage and in spite of the efforts of the firemen it could not be brought under control. F. A. Emerick, a member of the Water Works Co. granted to Mr. Dilts and Mr. Waugh, president of the village, the privilege of using a hydrant near by. Cronyn Hose and No. 3 attached to this and two more streams were soon playing upon the building. It was nine o'clock before the flames were under control and eleven before all were dismissed.

The building which was built of wood was completely gutted and made one of the most stubborn fires to handle that our firemen have had in many a day. Some of the machinery will be taken from the ruins and be worth something but most of the contents are ruined.

The loss will amount to $15,000, on which there is an insurance of $5,000.

The insurance is as follows: Niagara, $1,000, Streeter's Agency; $1,000, Hartford; $1,000, N. B. Mercantile; $1,000, Royal; $1,000, Ins. Co. N. A., H. E. Nichols' Agency.

Mr. Dilts was burned out in the same place about six years ago. He feels his present loss more severely from the fact that there was every indication of a prosperous season and was about to complete arrangements for a large contract which he will probably now be unable to accept.

Called to Account.

The Patriot last week retracted its statements made in a former issue concerning "The Reform Board" of 1874, but does not propose to make any allowance for the shortcomings of THE TIMES. It says:

"H. V. Spencer has bought George Bache's interest in the Barnes & Bache saloon on Second street."—Fulton Times.

And again

O'Grady polled the highest vote yesterday and Willard Johnson the lowest. —Fulton Times.

Neither of the above statements are true and "this must be attributed to the ignorance of the Times in this matter, as it is preposterous to suppose for a moment that it would endeavor to mislead its readers," or to misrepresent individuals to their injury. And doubtless the Times will make Mr. Johnson and Mr. Spencer as elaborate apologies as we make Mr. Nelson."

In the first place, Mr. Barnes states that he is the proprietor of the saloon on Second street, but through Mr. Spencer's instrumentality succeeded in getting the necessary funds to purchase Bache's interest, while Mr. Bache states that he gave the bill of sale to Mr. Spencer. The card published last week in THE TIMES fully vindicated Mr. Spencer and this statement we feel vindicates ourselves. Our humblest apologies are due to Mr. Johnson and at the request of the Patriot we extend them. We regret the mistake on Mr. Johnson's account "and should have preferred to wrong almost any other man." As Mr. Hill, the candidate who received a lower vote, was placed in nomination at the Republican caucus by an element that intended to have him defeated, he was hardly considered a regular candidate by us and for that reason, doubtless, his vote escaped our mind at the time.

Iowa's [illegible]

EDITOR CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE: At the outset of the Prohibition movement in Iowa the Hon. Wm. Larrabee then in the State Senate, belonged to that wing of Republican politicians who did not favor Prohibition, especially Constitutional Prohibition as the best method of handling the liquor traffic. He was known as a High License man. He always said that the moral sentiment of the people should be brought up to that point that would make Prohibitory enactment a possible success. Consequently, when he was nominated for Governor in 1885, there was a general feeling of distrust in the minds of our most devoted Prohibitionists regarding him. That feeling has all been set aside by everything he has said and done since his election. His inaugural, January, 1886; his various acts since favoring the enforcement of the Prohibitory law; his recent attempts to bring to justice the perpetrators of the "foul murder" at Sioux City; and the utterances to his own county's Temperance Alliance, a copy of which I send below, are enough to satisfy the most distrustful. It will be necessary to explain that Fayette County is the home of the Governor. J. O. Hoover Esq., is an active Temperance man, and a member the Methodist Episcopal church at Brush Creek in the same county.

WEST UNION, FEB. 14.

At the meeting of the Temperance Alliance of Fayette county the following letter was read from Governor Larrabee:

STATE OF IOWA
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
DES MOINES, FEB. 3, 1887

J. O. HOOVER, ESQ., BRUSH CREEK.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed find $20 for your fund for the enforcement of Prohibitory laws.

I think it will not be convenient for me to attend the mass-meeting on the 9th inst.

I am glad to see you moving in this direction. Fayette county is one of the best, if not the best county in the State, but it is getting behind in the enforcement of Temperance laws. There are many counties where anything resembling a saloon cannot be found. It should be so in Fayette. I find in the cities and counties where the Prohibitory law is well enforced, crime and police expenses fall off wonderfully. Not a saloon is open in the largest city in the State. The sheriff of this county told me a few days since that he had ruined his business by enforcing the law; He also stated that he was glad of it. Several of the judges have recently told me that there was a marked falling off of criminal business in their courts in consequence of the enforcement of the law. There are several judicial districts without a single saloon. If our courts and sheriffs and constables would do their duty properly, the saloons would soon be completely driven out. We have great reason to be encouraged. Many of the judges elected at last fall's election are much more likely to enforce the law than their predecessors. A few courageous and determined men can compel violators of the law to run from any community.

I wish our good people would rouse up and drive the cursed traffic from Fayette county. They can do it. Please call on me for anything I can do to help.

WM. LARRABEE.

This letter ought to be printed in letters of gold and put into the hands of every citizen from Maine to Texas, from Puget Sound to Florida Keys, and especially into the hands of every person in the least disturbed by the cry of the whisky crowd, that "Prohibition is a failure in Iowa." We know out in this State that it is not a failure, and our noble Governor knows it right well. Now that Michigan, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, and Missouri are this year to submit the question of Constitution Prohibition to the people, these noble and manly words of our Governor ought to be quoted by every campaign speaker in those commonwealths to silence the cry that "Prohibition is a failure in Iowa."

GENTS:—In reply to your communication of April, 15th, I take pleasure in stating that for years physicians and druggists have been trying to obtain a remedy for those obstinate and painful complaints such as neuralgia, rheumatism and nervous headaches, to which everyone is liable who lives in this climate, and until quite recently, the efforts of both chemists and doctor have been unsuccessful, but I am pleased at last that such a remedy has been found in the compound of Dr. Pardee's Rheumatic Remedy. I recommend it to all who are suffering with rheumatism. I have yet to hear of the first case of rheumatism which it has not greatly relieved, and where the remedy has been used as directed, nearly every case has been permanately cured.

"Dead-beats."

What means this great commotion about a pension bill,
That shakes the body politic as though it had a chill?—
The bill they call "dependent," which refers, as I am told,
To a remnant of the army, who fought in days of old.

I read in certain papers, and hear it on the streets,
That the bill is in the interest of "paupers" and "dead-beats."
It seems a little singular; they didn't call them so—
The soldiers of the Union—some twenty years ago.

How many are the "dead-beats?" how many were there then,
When the loyal homes responded to the call for loyal men?
Were the many brave and honest? then trust these men to-day,
When their steps are growing feeble and their hair is turning gray!

What, though some shirked their duty, through greed or craven fear?
There were more who "faced the music" and at roll-call answered "here!"
And because they ne'er responded to the dreaded surgeon's call:—
And no hospital could hold them:—cannot prove Their claims at all.

It is hard to be a "pauper" I remember well the while
When the nation was dependent on the gallant rank and file.
It used up all the "surplus," but no word of tongue or pen
Against the loyal millions, who were so "dependent" then!
But times are changed; the veterans are only "paupers" now;
A burden on the government and dead-beats anyhow."
But the men who bore the musket, to-day can bear the same;
And no reproach can tarnish the Union soldier's name.

Let the Bairnies Play

Oh! let the bairnies play themsel's,
I like to hear their din,
I like to hear each restless foot
Come tripping oot and in.
I like to see each face sae bright,
And each wee heart sae gay,
They mind me o' my ain young days—
Oh! let the bairnies play.

Oh! dinna check their sinless mirth
Or mak' them dull and wae
Wi' gloomy looks or cankered words,
But let the bairnies play.
Auld douce wise folks should ne'er forget
They ance were young as they,
As fu' o' fun and mischief, too
Then let the bairnies play.

And never try to set a heid,
Wi' auld age grim and gray,
Upon a wee saft snawy neck
No let the bairnies play,
For, oh! there's many a weary hour
And mony a waeful' day
Before them if God spare their lives
Sae let the bairnies play.

The Ladies of the White House.

Ex-President Hayes is the only surviving incumbent of the Executive office prior to President Cleveland, but there are eleven ladies living who have presided over the Executive Mansion. They are: Mrs. Julia Gardiner Tyler, widow of President Tyler. Mrs. Sample, her step daughter, now an inmate of the Louise Home in Washington city, who during the period between her own mother's death, about September, 1842, and the marriage of her father in 1844, was the head of the household in the President's Mansion. Mrs. James K. Polk, widow of President Polk, who immediately succeeded Mrs. Tyler. Mrs. Harriet Lane Johnson, the niece of President Buchanan, who was for four years the mistress of the Executive Mansion. Mrs. Patterson, the daughter of President Johnson, who, the wife of the latter being old and not in very good health, jointly with her sister, Mrs. Stover now dead, did the honors of the White House while their father was President. Mrs. Julia Dent Grant, ex-President Grant's widow, who lived eight years in the White House. Mrs. Rutherford B. Hayes, wife of ex-President Hayes, who was there four years. Mrs. James A. Garfield, widow of ex-President Garfield, who lived only six months in the Executive Mansion. Mrs. Ellen Arthur McElroy, the late ex-President Arthur's sister, who was the lady of the White House during several months of each of the three years and a half while he was President. Miss Rose Elizabeth Cleveland, who had the same place for fifteen months and Mrs. Grover Cleveland. A reception at the White House by all these ladies together has been suggested. It would be a unique event.

A Boy's Composition on Girls

Here is a sample of a boy's composition: "Girls are very stuck up and dignified in their manner and behaveyour. They think more of dress than anything and like to play with dowls and rags. They cry if they see a cow in the far distance and are afraid of guns. They stay at home all the time and go to church every Sunday. They are always sick. They are always funny and making fun of boys hands and they say how dirty. They can't play marbles. I pity them, poor things. They make fun of boys and then turn around and love them. I don't beleave they never killed a cat or anything. They look out every nite and say, 'Oh, a'nt the moon lovely!' Thir is one thing I have not told and that is they al-ways now their lessons bettern boys."

SLOOPS AND SCHOONERS.

Young Ladies on a Yacht Receiving Nautical Instruction.

A captain who attempted teaching nauticalism to a party of ladies on a yacht not long since fared as follows:

Lady No. 1—"Now, captain, what is a sloop?"

Captain—"A sloop has but one mast."

L (pointing to a schooner)—"Is that a sloop?"

C.—No, that is a schooner. A sloop has but one mast; a schooner has two, as you see. Now remember—sloop one mast, schooner two."

L.—"Certainly. How many masts has a ship?"

C. "Three."

L.—"How many masts did you say a sloop had?"

C.—"One. Sloop one mast, schooner two, ship three."

L. (pointing to a sloop)—"Is that a schooner?"

C.—"No, that's a sloop. Sloop one mast, schooner two, ship three."

L.—"Oh, yes; I remember" (pointing to a ship) "isn't that a pretty schooner?"

C.—That's not a schooner—that's a ship. Don't you see it has three masts?"

L.—"Oh, yes. Isn't that a big schooner lying at the wharf there?"

C.—"Schooner! Now, how many masts has that vessel?"

L.—"Three."

C.—"Well, what has three masts?"

L.—"A—a sloop."

C.—"Sloop! Sloop has one mast, I tell you: schooner two, ship three."

Lady No. 2—"Why, Jane, how stupid you are! A schooner always has one mast."

L. (chatty and quite oblivious of stupidity)—"What's a brig?"

C.—"A brig has two masts, and is rigged like a ship with square sails."

Lady No. 2—"Jane, look at this sloop coming along."

C.—"That's a schooner, don't you see the two masts! Sloop one mast, schooner two masts, ship three masts."

L.—"Are those schooners there with three masts?"

C.—"Yes."

L.—"I thought you said a schooner had but one mast?"

C.—"Two! two masts! Sloop one mast schooner two, ship three."

L.—"But that schooner has three masts."

C.—"But that is a three masted schooner."

L.—"Then a schooner can have any number of masts?"

C.—"No. Sloop one mast, schooner two and sometimes three masts, ship three masts."

L.—"I'm sure I can't make it out. It's awfully puzzling. What is a bark?"

C. (unable any longer to popularize, nautical science, falls back on technical expressions)—"Vessels with two masts ship rigged and one mast sloop rigged, square sails on fore and main mast, and fore and aft sails on the mizzen."

L.—Mizzen! What's mizzen?"

C.—"Last mast aft, madam."

L.—Aft! What's the aft?"

C.—"The stern, madam."

L.—"Oh, I'm sure I can't make it out. Is that a sloop there?" (Pointing again to a schooner.)

C.—No; its a schooner! Sloop one mast, schooner two, ship three.

L.—"How many masts has a man-o'-war?"

C.—"Three."

L.—"Well, what's the difference between a man-o'-war and a smack?"

C.—(Groans and is silent.)

L. What are those sticks across the masts of that schooner, Captain?"

C.—"That's not a schooner. Schooner two ship three. Sloop one. That's a ship. Those are the yards which hold the sails.

L.—"Oh!"

C. (encouraged)—"Now the first yard on the fore mast is the fore yard, the second is the fore topsail yard, the third is the fore top-gallant yard."

L.—"What is that yard sticking straight up out of that little schooner?"

C.—"Great Scott? This—that's not a schooner; it's a sloop. Sloop one mast schooner two, ship three. What you call her yard is her mast."

Lady No. 2—"Certainly, Jane; how stupid you are! Captain what are the names of the other masts on that schooner's yards you were pointing out to us?"

C. (internally)—"—— —— —— !!!"

Lady No. 2—"Captain, where are the lubbers?"

C. (captain wishes he could tell.)—"Up there on the ship's masts near the top."

L. (attentively looking at a schooner) "Near the top of the masts of that sloop?"

C.—"No, No! Further down. Where the futlock shrouds are fastened. No, no, not that vessel. A schooner has no lubbers (mentally,) except this one and they're on deck."

L. (whose interest in the locality of lubbers suddenly ceases)—"Isn't that a pretty ship sailing along?"

C.—"Ship! That's an old tub of a schooner, ma'am. Schooner two masts, ship three, sloop one, I tell you."

L.—"Can a sloop have two masts?"

C.—"Sloop one mast, schooner two, ship three."

Lady No. 2—"How many masts has a ship, captain?"

C.—"Ship three masts, schooner two, sloop one."

L.—"Yes, I know. Schooner one—no two masts, sloop two—no three, ship one. There!"

BY "THE DUCHESS."

CHAPTER XVII.

Meantime Millicent and Gerald Massareene are standing in the warm sunshine in one corner of the tennis ground. Miss Grey, who had been playing, but has now resigned her place and her racket to another, is looking at her companion with an expression half wistful, half mischievous—perhaps wholly mutinous.

"Time is flying," says the young man ardently. "Have you not come to a decision yet? It is almost the last hour. After to-morrow there will be no grace left. He returns then."

"Granit? Yes."

"You must choose between me and him. You know that, and if you hesitate. When he returns it will give him an advantage, because then he will again have the world on his side—his very presence gives him an extra chance. If you could decide—if you could! let me speak before he comes."

"I don't see how his presence or absence can influence the matter. There is to me only one thing to be considered—whether or not we can live happily when quite poor."

"It wouldn't be quite," interposes he eagerly. "There would be the eight hundred a year."

"There would be—starvation!"

"If you choose to term it so," says he a little haughtily, his Irish blood aflame. "And as you so choose, it of course declares to me that you have made up your mind not to share it." He looks at her for a little while with his head well drawn up and his eyes at once indignant [illegible] entreaty. Millicent, receiving this look point blank, [illegible] that the moment has come to [illegible] or lose him for ever.

"You are so [illegible] impulsive," she says, with a [illegible] that is sufficiently well [illegible] the appearance of [illegible] belongs to it. "I understand [illegible] as well as you do," petulantly. "It is poverty with one man, misery with the other. One has to decide between them—and—one does not like poverty!"

"Does one prefer misery?"

"N—o. I suppose not." Then she pauses and locks her fingers together, and then unlocks them. "It is misery either way," she says.

"Not if there is love," entreats he softly. "And—you will have to make up your mind now."

"You mean that you will not wait to receive my decision later on?" asks she, with a sudden swift glance from her eyes.

"Yes, that is what I mean," says Massareene.

It is to be now or never, then! She realizes the situation at once, and admires her true lover a little the more in that she knows he will abide by his word, and that if she now trifles with him, he will be over the border to-morrow ere daylight shows the land, and beyond all recalling, be the voice of the charmer never so sweet.

"You mean, too"— she says, temporizing a little.

"Nothing but that. Make your choice now, to-day, between me and him. To-morrow there will be no choice left. If you do not love me, that will matter not at all, and I shall have had an escape from one who merely used me as a toy wherewith to pass the time. If you do love me, it will matter so far that you will break all bonds and defy all discomfort to link your lot with mine." His face is very pale as he says this, but his eyes are light with resolution and his voice is firm. He is almost handsome as he looks at her, with his glance fond but determined, and his right hand resting on his heart inside his coat as though to still its tempestuous beating.

Miss Grey, with a tremulous smile, draws nearer to him.

"I have decided," she says gently. "Now and forever."

"Is it to be him, or me?" Though his accent is steady, she can see that his very lips are bloodless.

"You, you!" she says. And then there is a long, long silence between them. They are standing in a corner of the tennis ground open to all the world, so that any demonstration of joy or gratitude or love is impossible. But even when action is denied, the eyes can speak.

"My beloved!" says Mr. Massareene in a tone so low that she can barely catch it, but it is so full of infinite delight and love that she tells herself it is sufficient in itself to atone to her for the enormous fortune she is willingly flinging away for his dear sake.

"There is only one thing more," she says after a little bit. "Do not speak of this until to-morrow has gone by. It will distress auntie and Lady Valworth, and spoil her party."

"But, if I say nothing, when Boyle returns he will still regard you as engaged to him and—and he may expect"——

"He will expect nothing. We have never been a loving couple, I assure you. No. *Let the matter rest until Lady Val*worth has had all her enjoyment out of her son's birthday ball."

"It shall be as you wish, of course." Then, forgetful of everything save of her, he takes one of her hands and holds it closely. "Millicent! tell me you have no regret—that you do not think I have done you harm instead of good."

"I think of nothing except that I have given myself to you for weal or woe, as the case may be, and that I believe it will be for weal."

"But if not, my darling? Now that I have really won you, I grow faint hearted lest you should ever [re]pent. Oh! if you should do that! If there should be only poverty—that is woe—before you!"

"I should prefer that to weal with Granit or any other man," she says softly, with such a light in her eyes as he had never seen there before.

* * * * *

The day wanes slowly; and night draws near with reluctant footsteps. Nadine, standing before her glass, is conscious of a thrill of satisfied vanity as she sees the dainty vision that is gazing back at her. All in white the vision stands: a simply clad thing in virgin muslin, but with a face above it beautiful as a dream. That it is her own face rejoices the heart of Nadine.

The many guests accummulating for to-morrow night's ball have all arrived, and it is with a flutter at her breast that Nadine takes a last glance at her charming person, and clasps round her neck the diamond cross—Paul Annerley's first gift to her. It had been deemed by her too grand an ornament to be worn on the earlier evenings here, when only a simple black grenadine had been her dinner dress, but to-night, as she sees herself looking all that the heart of man could desire, in her delicate Indian fabric, she tells herself that the glistening diamonds are what will add the last finishing touch to an already perfect picture.

Taking up her fan, and returning the maid's congratulations on her appearance with a pleased little laugh, she leaves her room and goes slowly down the staircase toward the drawing room. For a minute or two she pauses outside the door, partly from natural nervousness at encountering so many strangers—their voices coming to her in a subdued [illegible] from within—and partly to give herself a last glance over in the [illegible]

The smile had died from her lips, and her face is colorless as her gown when she has finished these sad musings, and opening the drawing room door, advances slowly to where she can see Lady Valworth in the distance.

The room is somewhat crowded. Many look up as she goes by them. Some regard her silently—these the men; some ask, in a deprecatory way, who she is—these the women.

All show an undisguised interest.

Lady Valworth, with whom she has become a reigning favorite, turns to greet her as she approaches her side.

"You must let me introduce you to a very charming little friend of mine," she says to her companion, Lord Aster, holding out her hand to Nadine with a kindly smile. "A friend, too, of Millicent's!" She gets through the introduction, and Lord Aster, an old beau with a juvenile lisp, and a wig callow and golden as a chicken's down, murmurs something complimentary in a boyish tone that is as labored as it is ancient.

"There are a few arrangements as yet incomplete. Some eligibles unassigned," whispers Lady Valworth to her favorite. "I should like to give you some one who would amuse you through the tedious time of dinner. Would you like"——

She comes suddenly to a dead stop. She had been murmuring to the girl in a gay aside, with a smile upon her face, but now the smile has given place to a glance of mingled astonishment and horror. Her eyes are fixed on Nadine's breast, where the diamond cross—Paul Annerley's gift—is glittering and sparkling magnificently as the girl's gentle bosom rises and falls.

"That—where did you get that?" demands Lady Valworth, in a stifled tone.

Lord Aster, fortunately, is glancing through his jaunty eyeglass at some one sitting quite at the other end of the room. Nadine and Lady Valworth are virtually alone.

"That?" asks Nadine nervously, surprised at Lady Valworth's manner. She looks so innocently at her hostess that the latter, by a supreme effort, recovering herself, lays her hand reassuringly upon her arm.

"Nothing, my love. It was a mere start I received. That pretty cross upon your neck reminded me of one I used to admire long ago. Who gave it to you?"

"Paul Annerley—Paul, to whom I am engaged," says the girl, with a little sigh. In truth, the pretty bauble—the value of which is unguessed by her—is devoid of all tender interest, coming as it did from him.

"Ah! a pretty gift," returns Lady Valworth absently. In spite of herself her manner is constrained. She moves away from Nadine and crosses the room to where Millicent is standing, conversing with Geraldine Massareene. Her face is very pale, and there is excitement in her eye as she approaches her niece.

"Millicent," says she abruptly, tapping Miss Grey's arm with her trembling fingers. "Something more than strange has happened. I must speak to you because you are her friend, and"——

"What is it? You look as if you had seen a ghost!" exclaims Miss Grey, compelling her to sink upon a lounge near her.

"I have seen what I never hoped to see again! Part of my stolen diamonds! I have seen my diamond cross!"

CHAPTER XVIII.

"Where?" exclaims Millicent, as much taken aback as even Lady Valworth can desire.

"Round Nadine's neck."

"Oh, you must have been mistaken! How could Nadine have a diamond cross of such value?"

"How, indeed! She said she had been given it by that man to whom she is engaged—Paul Annerley."

"A city clerk! Impossible! Dearest aunt, you may be sure you have made a mistake. These French jewelries are so good nowadays. They copy so exactly the fine old designs that one is easily deceived when brought face to face with them."

"No; I am not deceived," says Lady Valworth. Her tone is that of one who is sure of her argument. It is, indeed, so strong, so unlike the usually vacillating Lady Valworth, that Millicent is struck by it. "It is my cross—the one belonging to the diamond set Sir Thomas gave me on my marriage, that is hanging around her neck."

"But how could Nadine"——

"If you doubt it," said Lady Valworth, with sudden vehemence, "let me have an authority to prove that what I say is right. Call Sir Thomas. He is over there. Ask him." "Dear Lady Valworth, but you know you would not like to distress Miss Roche," puts in Gerald Massareene who has been perforce a listener to the disclosure and who now feels he must take a prominent part in the discussion.

He is amply rewarded for his interference by an eloquent look from Millicent.

"True—true!" says Lady Valworth sighing. "I shall not speak to Sir Thomas now but by and by I shall call his attention to it. Good heavens! Millicent this may mean the recovery of the whole set."

"Hardly I think. These matters drift. By piecemeal they enter the windows of respectable jelwelers, and all the research in the world will not bring to light the real offenders."

"Still, it gives hope. I shall examine Nadine, and—"

"Not now—not until to-morrow night has gone over our heads!" entreats Millicent, eagerly, willing to spare Nadine a shock. "Why would you make unhappy a guest in your house on the very eve of Granit's birthnight ball?"

This is the very argument of all others to gain over Lady Valworth to her way of thinking.

"Yes. All should go smoothly for Granit," says Granit's mother thoughtfully. "And Nadine—she—she may not be to blame."

"May not?" Millicent's eyes grow dark with indignant reproach. "What can you mean by such a speech as that? Nadine! Do you for one instant believe that she has had any part in this strange story of which you speak?"

"My dear child, I would not hurt you in any way, as you well know—not even through another. And as for Nadine, you can see yourself how highly I esteem her."

"Highly indeed, when you can hint at scandal in connection with her."

"I have hinted at nothing. I confess I am horribly distressed at seeing my own cross round another's neck. Do you blame me for that?"

In her distress at having brought down the anger of her son's fiancee upon her head, and her agitation at seeing again a portion of her lost diamonds, poor Lady Valworth is reduced to the very verge of despair.

"Be reasonable, Millicent. At least, grant me justice. I have said nothing to Nadine. Why should I, when I deem her innocent? Yet the connecting link between me and the robber of my diamonds lies with her."

"I will not have her connected with this affair in any way," cries Millicent, hotly, tears in her eyes. "In seeking for your missing link, you will incriminate her, and terrify her and make her wretched. And she has had nothing to do with it. Has she?"

She turns almost defiantly upon Massareene, [illegible] would hardly have worn them here."

He is so earnest, so eager in his speech, that Millicent, with her eyes full of tears, lays her hand on his. This act repays him for many things, and makes him trebly Nadine's friend. And his argument, too goes home to Lady Valworth, so that two causes are gained. If the latter had ever permitted herself to have any doubts, they now vanish into nothing [illegible] only Nadine's pale, pure face rises before her. On such a face no guilt could lie!

"My dear, I meant nothing—nothing, so far as Nadine is concerned!" she cries in agitation; "but, of course, it is only natural that I should desire the return of my diamonds—Sir Thomas' diamonds. If Nadine can help me to a solution of this difficulty, I shall forever hold her in my debt."

"Who gave this cross to her?" asks Millicent suddenly, if a little coldly.

"The man to whom she is engaged. Paul Annerley she called him. The man she is going to marry."

"You present him to me in the light of either a dupe or a swindler."

"A dupe, most probably. He may, however, be of use to us in the discovery of the missing stones."

"It will distress Nadine very much to have her lover accused of being an outsider in this affair."

"I do not see that," says Massareene, quickly, who is as honest as he is fulfilled of love. "If he can lead justice to its ends, why should he not be used? Miss Roche, I am sure, would be the very last to prevent that; and so, when you come to think of it"—looking at Millicent—"would you."

"Well—perhaps. But Nadine must not be teased now. Not to-night. To-morrow night perhaps, when the ball is over—but not before."

"As you will," says Lady Valworth, with a sigh.

She would have liked to speak with Nadine now at once. "Is it a conspiracy?" asks Duran, coming up at this moment and touching Lady Valworth lightly on the arm. "You all look so solemn—even Miss Grey, who, as a rule, is gay as spring time."

"Oh!" exclaims Millicent; "it is this curious affair," she goes on; "auntie imagines she has seen to-night some of her lost diamonds. And where do you think?"

"In the servants' hall?" suggests he, laughing.

"No. Here. In this very room, worn by one of her guests."

"Impossible!" Something in her tone removes the smile from Duran's lips. He turns to Lady Valworth. "A guest?" he says.

"Millicent is indiscreet," hesitates Lady Valworth, casting a reproachful glance at her niece.

"Not that; only a little angry," returns Millicent, with a rather tremulous smile. "And why should what you have told us be hidden? Why, after all, are we to whisper of it in corners? We almost condemn her in so doing."

"Condemn! Who?" exclaims Duran sharply.

Instinct, love, what you will, has led him to a knowledge of the truth.

"Nadine," replies Lady Valworth in a low tone, her eyes lowered.

"Who has dared"— He checks himself abruptly by an effort that renders his face as white and cold as marble. "You can scarcely allude to Miss Roche when speaking of this matter," he goes on, with a labored attempt to appear calm.

"Of Nadine? Yes. But it is all a mistake," says Millicent. "Lady Valworth has seen a diamond cross around her neck. But one cross of that sort is so like another! I for my part feel sure it is a mere coincidence." "It is a point on which no doubt should be allowed to rest even for a moment," declares Duran, his brow darkening. He looks round him. "Miss Roche is at the other end of the room. Will you permit me to bring her here, Lady Valworth, and let you have a closer examination of this cross? You, too, Miss Grey? You know the cross in question?" "I have seen it—yes," says Millicent, slowly. "If you think it better to lift this doubt from Lady Valworth's mind so—bring Nadine here. But upon one thing I insist"—fixing her eyes first on him and then on her aunt with an imperious glance—"that no thought of our suspicion is betrayed to Nadine. I will not have her hurt—offended"——

She breaks off abruptly. She is agitated, and her eyes are troubled. Could she know it, her agitation, kindly, womanly as it is—has made Duran her friend for life.

"Certainly, no allusion should be made to—er—anything awkward," puts in Massareene hurriedly.

Duran has already gone in quest of Nadine; and presently returns, bringing her to where Lady Valworth, Millicent, and Gerald Massareene are standing.

The girl, flushed and lovely, forgetful for the moment of all her cruel future, and mindful only of the happy present that has given her Duran, advances toward the anxious, expectant group with smiling lips and wide, glad eyes. Upon her neck the fatal cross is rising, falling, glittering, as only the purest diamonds can. Millicent, her gaze fixed upon them, feels her heart contract. If not Lady Valworth's cross, it is unfortunately horribly like it.

Some few words pass between her and Nadine. The latter is too full of the hour's passionate joy to heed the grief within her friend's eyes. But Duran reads it. Lady Valworth, after one swift glance at the girl's neck, lets her gaze sink to her fan, with which she persistently trifles until Nadine has gone by them.

"Well?" she says then, addressing Millicent.

"I acknowledge it is like your cross—so like that it may be yours; and, if so, no doubt this Paul Annerley bought it for her from wherever the thief sold it."

"A city clerk!—to buy that jewel!"

There is unbelief, keen and strong, in Lady Valworth's low tone.

"How else could he have obtained it? Who is this Paul Annerley? How should he have had access to your jewel case?"

Miss Grey's tone is somewhat impatient.

"That is what I cannot say. I only know the cross is mine," replies her aunt doggedly.

"It resembles it. That I admit. But I think time will prove to you that you are mistaken. It is probably only paste."

"Paste of that sort is expensive for a city clerk."

Her obstinacy angers Millicent.

"Then in all probability, as I said before, it is mere glass—Spanish crystal—what you will," she says, shrugging her shoulders. "I can well believe it is a bit of French jewelry. What I cannot believe is, that Nadine has had any intercourse with a thief."

"As you have said, time will tell," replies Lady Valworth, moodily.

IT BANISHES PAIN.

Cold, damp weather aggravates the sufferings of the victim of rheumatic pains. All his joints seem to be unhinged and every movement is attended with excruciating pain. Rheumatism is an inflammation of the joints caused by a vitiated condition of the blood. To obtain relief from the effect you must first remove the cause. Brown's Sarsaparilla, which is totally unlike any other preparation of the kind known to medical science, has proved itself by repeated trials to be the greatest blood purifier which medical skill has been as yet able to devise. George Fairbrother, who has charge of the extensive stud of Hon. J. P. Bass, at Bangor, Me., says: "After suffering excruciating pain for years, from chronic rheumatism, I was entirely cured by the use of Brown's Sarsaparilla. I recommend it to all who are sufferers from this painful disease."

Mrs. C. P. Denton, of Hampden, Me., says: "A rheumatic fever, from which I suffered three years ago, left me in wretched physical condition. The five bottles of Brown's Sarsaparilla which I have taken have done wonders in the way of relieving me from pain and improving my general health."

A Remarkable Case

Oct. 21st, 1886.

MESSRS. W. H. HOOKER & CO.

Gentlemen—About three years ago my little grandchild (now nearly five years of age) was stricken with Eczema. Beginning in a mild form he slowly but surely became worse until his life was despaired of. Six months ago he had scrofulous looking sores, characteristic of Eczema, completely covering his face and body, effecting his hands to such an extent that his finger nails came off. Such was his alarming condition that it left me little hope of his recovery. I, as a last extremity, resorted to all the remedies advertised as good for Eczema, not only that, have consulted many physicians, including nine weeks treatment at the Oswego Hospital. From this treatment, the very best to be se*cured in this vicinity, the child derived little or no benefit. I wish to state* these facts in detail so you may fully understand (as I do) the remarkable success I have met with in using Dr Acker's Blood Elixir. Added to my own convictions the fact that physicians failed, giving up the case as incurable, I am only happy to assure you that the child owes its life to Dr. Acker's Blood Elixir. He is apparently on the road to entire recovery, in the near future. I cheerfully confirm and attest to the above and believe others (from my statement) suffering, may have reason to believe in the efficacy of this excellent remedy. Very Truly,

MRS. LESAGE.

What It Costs.

The annual liquor bill of the United States is $900,000,000, an amount so large we cannot comprehend it. The amount spent annually in prosecutions, that are the legitimate fruit of this illegitimate business, is estimated at from six to seven hundred millions. We will call it $684,000,000, and this added to the drink bill makes the enormous sum of $1,584,000,000, as the annual expense to this nation of the drink traffic.

This sum changed into silver dollars would make a belt clear around the globe, and go half way around the second time, or make a solid line of 37,500 miles long.

The population of the United States is now estimated at 60,000,000. This sum would give an annual income of $26.40 to each man, woman and child. It would pave a walk four feet wide and 1,171¾ miles long.

This sum in silver dollars reckoning $16 to a pound, would weigh 39,500 tons. If this were loaded on wagons, a ton to each team, and allowing thirty feet to each team it would make a procession 281¼ miles long.

The human mind cannot grasp the meaning of such vast sums.

An alarm of fire last Wednesday afternoon shortly before six o'clock called out the fire department. The fire proved to be a chicken coop on the grounds of Geo. Hall on the flats and was extinguished without the aid of the department.

A series of meetings will be held at the Universalist church on next Friday and Saturday evenings, and extend over Sunday the 17th. Rev. Dr. J. M. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

The Observer does not bropose to have Fulton surpass Oswego Falls in regard to the number of generatians that live together in one house. As an offset to the Howe family in this village it says:

"We can match the Times story and not half try. At Lower Oswego Falls there lives in one house, Mrs. C. Mooney aged 88 years, Mrs. G. C. Bartley aged 66 years, Mrs. Miller, aged 27, and her daughter, aged four years; great-grand-mother, grand-mother, mother, and child."

The village board at the last session appointed J. Ford Morris jailor and E. H. Morgan, F. J. VanValkenburgh and Willis Curtis policemen. Trustee Alex. Bradford, who had been acting as Street Commissioner the proceeding week, was appointed as such Commissioner and there upon resigned his position as Trustee. Anson J. Osborn was appointed as Trustee to fill the vacancy.

Otto H. Scholz, A. W. Stoneburg and and Seymour Parmalee were appointed the Board of Health. Mr. Stoneburg resigned his appointment with the assurance that he had no ill-feeling toward the Democratic members of the Board.

The appointment of Mr. Bradford as Street Commissioner does not meet with universal favor, many thinking that others equally capable and vastly more active in securing votes and doing work at election should have received the appointment.

Concerning a Former Fulton Pastor.

The many friends of Rev. H. W. Bennett in this locality will be pleased to read the following which is taken from a Utica paper of recent date. Mr. Bennett was formerly pastor of the M. E. church in this village.

"The people of the South Street M. E. Church arranged a dime social at the residence of their pastor, Rev. H. W. Bennett, last evening. Among the entertainments was "Miss Jarley's Wax Works" and other attractions of a light and pleasant character. Pastor Bennett was enjoying the entertainment as much as any one when he was called into the back parlor, where Hon. Joseph Joyce and many other friends stood ranged in the form of a circle. Mr. Joyce spoke happily of the faithful manner in which Mr. Bennett had performed his duties as pastor for three years and of their regrets over his departure under the rule of the church. He then handed Mr. Bennett a purse of $125 in gold, with the best wishes of all of his friends. Mr. Bennett made a fitting and appropriate acknowledgment,

Rev. L. D. White, speaking for Mrs. Thomas L. Benham, presented Mrs. Bennett with a handsome French clock, and said that the lady hoped that the bright face, cheerful tick and ever industrious hands would serve as a constant reminder of Mrs. Benham and all other good friends in Utica. Mrs. Bennett was as much pleased as her husband over this valuable combination of time and money—for "time is money."

People who do not know Mr. Benham thought that he was "left" by his wife this time, but as usual he got there with his memento. He said:

"During the past few years the relations which have existed between Mr. Bennett and myself have been most pleasant. You have been kind to me; in fact, more kind than I have deserved. Your kindness I can never forget. I have my faults, but one of them is not that of forgetting a friend. In my acquaintance with you I have noticed that you never carried a cane, but I hope you will live long enough to need one, and in view of that fact I take pleasure in presenting to you this gold-headed cane."

A very handsome ebony cane with a heavy gold head was then presented to Mr. Bennett, to enable him to bear his bag of gold and to point to his wife the fleeting moments as recorded upon the face of her clock. It bears the inscription: "To Rev, H. W. Bennett from T. L. Benham." The stick was selected in New York and is one worth having. The "dime sociable" was a very happy event for all concerned. Mr. Bennett has been an excellent pastor and his departure will be regretted by citizens generally."

Fire at the R. & O. Mills.

Shortly after nine o'clock yesterday fire was discovered in the drying room of the Oswego Falls mills. It was soon extinguished by the factory pumps the damage done was chiefly by water on the wool and yarn, amounting to a few hundred dollars. The village fire alarm was sounded and all the hose companies responded promptly and had an exciting run. Both steamers were taken over and ready for use but their services were not required. Considerable excitement prevailed among the employes.

Those Sling Shots.

Attention has been called to the prevailing habit of young boys of carrying sling shots and using them to shoot birds and at marks. Many windows have been broken by them, and much damage has been done, especially to the Baptist church, where 17 different holes have been made in the stained glass, and to the Universalist church. Last week a boy was seen to break the globe of the electric light by the Presbyterian church. Very many of the globes of the gas and oil lamps have been broken. It is getting customary to see birds with legs or wings broken or dead, that have been hit by these sling shots. It has become a great nuisance. I therefore call upon all citizens to report to the different police officers and the proper authorities the names of boys whom they see possessing or using sling shots, and to report any case of negligence on the part of policemen in reference thereto. Village of Fulton,

WM. WAUGH, President.

The First Sign

Of failing health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or in a sense of General Weariness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and for purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood.

Failing Health.

Ten years ago my health began to fail. I was troubled with a distressing Cough, Night Sweats, Weakness, and Nervousness. I tried various remedies prescribed by different physicians, but became so weak that I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. My friends recommended me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and I am now as healthy and strong as ever.—Mrs. E. L. Williams, Alexandria, Minn.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, that it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease. I have also prescribed it as a tonic, as well as an alterative, and must say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Fowler, D. D. S., M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

Dyspepsia Cured.

It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Indigestion and Headache up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians and tried a great many kinds of medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my headache disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties more perfectly. To-day my health is completely restored.—Mary Harley, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most reliable blood purifier yet discovered.—H. D. Johnson, 383 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

NEW YORK LETTER.

Miss Wolfe's Benevolence—The New Addition to our Art Museum—Some Incidents Concerning Miss Wolfe —A Curious Criminal Case The Death of John T. Raymond.

[Special to THE TIMES.]

Of course the death of Miss Wolfe created a sensation and set society circles agog over the possible disposition of her twenty millions. The publication of her will shows that she provided for her relatives most munificently, gave to charitable objects a very liberal share and left to Grace Church a splendid endowment. By far the most benificent of her bequests was the gift to the Museum of Art in the park. To this she leaves her entire collections of pictures and a fund of $250,000 for their care. This collection is the third finest private collection in the country, the collections of Vanderbilt and Walters ranking superior to hers, but able judges place it at a valuation of $500,000; so that her total gift to the Museum is equivalent to a good three quarters of a million. Miss Wolfe was the great Lady Bountiful and her benefactions during life will amount to a good round sum. There was hardly a charity connected with the Episcopal church that she did not have something to do with. Upon the Riverside Drive was the suburban mansion of the Wolfe family in the days when New York did not extend beyond 14th Street, and when Bond and Bleeker streets were the fashionable quarter. This beautiful residence with the whole city lot that surrounds it together with sufficient money to erect several other large buildings she gave as a home for fallen young women.

This little incident may illustrate the character of the woman who before her death was the wealthiest single woman in America. Of course with so much wealth, it would follow that much of it would be invested in landed estate. So, indeed it was. Several blocks of houses on and contiguous to Broadway were part of the Wolfe estate. A gentleman of my acquaintance once told me that not one cent of rent she received came from a liquor dealer. She gave specific orders that under no circumstances should any of her property be leased for liquor dealing. Manifestly a high standard to take considering the fact that that class pay higher rents than almost any other tradesmen.

The great query is why she never married. I heard it stated that her idea was that she was necessary to her father's happiness, and out of filial affection remained single. I fancy her case is similar to that of the late Tilden "Sorrow for a lost Lenore." So rumor says.

With this gift to the museum by Miss Wolfe comes the gift of Mr. Geo. I. Seney of ten pictures of acknowledged merit valued at $40,000. Seney went down in the financial whirlpool that engulfed Grant and the Marine bank. His fortune evaporated and the bank—The Metropolitan—with which he was connected and of which he was president found it convenient to wind up its business. He had $900,000 worth of pictures and these went to the auctioneer's block. Having settled with his creditors, even though it took almost every dollar, he began the struggle again. Men who know say Seny is worth a round million. Wall street has had many such experiences. There is Villard. Two years ago a pauper personally, now after a four months absence from the country, he returns with the privilege to use other peoples money for investment. Is he making money, say you? Well, he is a wonderfully shrewd manager and his experience in the Northern Pacific seems to have been veay useful. He is able to live in Tiffany's now Madison Avenue mansion and pays $50,000 per year for the privilege. There is a funny superstition about new houses and that accounts for Villard's occupancy of Tiffany's house. Rich men who build houses for their own use think it bad luck to be their first occupants. So with many others.

The genial Raymond, that prince of comedians, is dead. Raymond is identified with the metropolitan stage. For nearly 30 years he has been a winter star on the boards of some one of our best theatres. Raymond was one of the most genial men one could possibly meet. A person who would attract attention anywhere.

The character by which he is known is that of Col. Mulberry Sellers, the hero of Mark Twain's "Gilded Age." Raymend created this character and stood unequaled in its rendition.

The peculiarties which this individual possessed are rather characteristic of Raymond; so that in playing Sellers he was in a measure duplicating himself. When brought out here, it had a magnificent run. Though known to the world as John T. Raymond, as a matter of fact he was christened John O'Brien, and hailed from Buffalo. He tried to be a merchant but Shakespeare's plays had greater charms, and he became the ablest comedian of our modern stage. His last appearance was during the winter of 1885.

The Court of General Sessions has been occupied with the trial of a rather singular case. Singular because of the circumstances that surround the prisoner. The prisoner was Henry Garrett, charged with stealing money from a French widow whose husband left her a little money with which to defend her title to her place of business. This Garrett being a lawyer, became acquainted with these circumstances and by pledging himself to defend her title conspired secretly to obtain the money which the widow, through fear of the possible insecurity of the banks, kept in a strongly bound box. Garrett succeeded in his schemes and obtained some $12,000. At the trial Garrett made no defence and was convicted. There is where the funniest part comes in. It seems that Garrett had been adopted by a very respectable and moderately wealthy family of Jersey. He had been carefully nurtured and had grown up under good moral influence. Some how or other the money his foster parents gave him was insufficient and he forged his benefactor's name, obtained a very considerable sum of money. For his crime he was sent to State's Prison, but his foster mother disbelieving his guilt obtained his pardon. He very soon after went into other questionable schemes, but was not caught until his trouble with the widow. His adoption by the Jersey family was purely a matter of philanthrophy on their part they knowing nothing of his antecedents. It would seem that his evil inclinations were due to some inherited badness. Darwin affirms that hereditary is more than one half of life and so far as the case of Garrett goes it thus appears to WANDERER.

Easter Sunday.

Easter generally is a pleasant day but we doubt if a more perfect one could have been wished for. It was truly an ideal Easter. The morning dawned clear and bright and the sun shining during the entire day made it the most spring-like of any that we have experienced this year. Everyone enjoyed the advent of spring weather and went to church unincumbered by winter wraps. Easter bonnets appeared in large numbers, some of which were noticeably fine Appropriate services were held in all the churches, the pulpits being filled by the regular pastors except at Zion church where Rev. Mr. Robinson, of Cortland officiated. Several of the churches were tastefully adorned with evergreens and flowers in honor of the day. At the Episcopal and Catholic churches especial efforts were made by the choir and the music and singing were very enjoyable.

The Black Crook.

This spectacular play is to be presented at Stephens opera house on Saturday evening April 16th. The Bangor Commercial of a recent date says:

A crowded house witnessed the opening presentation of the Black Crook at the Opera House last evening. This famous spectacular production has been somewhat changed in detail from the original which enjoyed such extended popularity 20 years ago, but most of the old familiar features are retained, and the grand transformation scene winds up as of yore in a blaze of glory, the scenic beauties of the piece. The costumes worn were very handsome and the calcium light brought out their beauty in a very striking manner. The scenic effects were on a scale perhaps never before equalled on this stage and fully realized the anticipations of the audience. The specialty business was most excellent, the Herbert brothers' acrobatic performances being equal at least to anything in that line ever seen here. The audience was very enthusiastic over this feature of the performance. Del Vecho made some excellent music on bottles, bells, etc., and received a generous share of applause. Mr. Duncan's ventriloquil performance created a great deal of amusement and it was difficult for him to bring his part of the entertainment to a close, owing to the persistent encores. Another big house will doubtless greet the company to-night, all doubt in regard to the propriety of ladies attending having been entirely dispelled.

Opening Day at F. E. Bacon's to-morrow.

The attention of our readers is called to the great carpet and furniture sale for the next two weeks at the old established and well-known house of Milton S. Price in Syracuse. Also to those who rendered their services to the church choir.

WORTH KNOWING.

One thousand women own and manage farms in Iowa.

All fowls that feather slowly are, it is claimed, hardy.

The better the seed you sow, the better the return, providing other things are equal.

The Herefords have proven a popular breed on the western cattle ranches.

Progressive growers no longer feed little chicks an exclusive diet of corn meal.

Fine butter is a luxury and will always command a good price in every city market.

Treat the orchard as one of the fields, and its produce as one of the crops.

No other cereal crop has for 250 years been so free from injury by insect pest as corn.

It's all right to scrape the old rough bark from the apple trees, but be very careful to not go too deep.

Nobody has seen ground harrowed too much as a preparation for wheat, for it is hardly possible to get too fine tilth.

Regularity as to time of milking should be observed, and the milk drawn quickly. Irregularity and slowness dry up a cow.

Tomato, cabbage and other tender plants are often saved at time of transplanting by dipping the roots into manure water and rich earth mixed to about the consistency of thin mush.

Profitable culture requires that care be taken in setting out plants to give sunny exposure to whatever delights in heat and sunshine, reserving partially shaded spots to plants that will thrive in the shade.

No lawn can be long maintained in good order without that compression which the roller tends to give. Rolling ought to be done early, before the ground becomes dry.

The final estimates of the cereal crop of 1886 have been published by the department of agriculture. The wheat crop of 1886 was 457,218,000 bushels or 100,000,000 bushels more than the crop of 1885. The yield of corn reached 1,665,000,000 bushels.

In the production of tobacco in the United States, Kentucky ranks first with nearly 200,000,000 pounds per year; Virginia second with 80,000,000 then Pennsylvania, Ohio, Tennessee, Maryland, North Carolina, Connecticut and Missouri in the order named. The several states produce about 500,000,000 pounds yearly.

Catarrh, when chronic, becomes very offensive. It impossible to be otherwise healthy, and, at the same time, afflicted with catarrh. This disagreeable disease, in its most obstinate and dangerous forms, can be cured by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Apples.

The list of standard apples is a large one. The Baldwin leads as a winter apple in this section which may be roughly outlined as beginning in Maine, and running through Massachusetts, parts of Connecticut, New York, and the northern parts of Pennsylvania and Ohio, and that part of Michigan where it is sufficiently hardy. The Baldwin is wonderfully prolific, and where we have indicted that it succeeds, it is the most profitable winter apple, and even a late summer one, but always prolific.

The Baldwin delights in a rocky soil. Rhode Island Greening does not succeed so well as the Baldwin but has a drooping habit of growth. It does well in favored localities and in the same range of latitude and climate.

Green Newton Pippin and Yellow Pippin are fruits nearly identical except in color and a trifle in flavor, and are the best apples for export, and the most highly esteemed for that purpose. The Newtowns grow well in Connecticut, the Valley of the Hudson, Western New York and to a limited extent in similar soils and latitudes. It, (the Yellow Newtown) is also successful in Virginia under the name of Albermarle Pippin. It requires a potash soil with a strong subsoil to be profitable.

Swaar, so named from the German, which means heavy, and it weighs more per bushel than any other kind, if we except the Arkansas, or what is considered a synonym, the Black Twig. The Swaar is not widely successful. It does well on the Hudson on strong clay soils, and is successful in a few other favored localities.

Yellow Bellflower does well in low, moist situations, near river bottoms in Maine and New Hampshire, and is partially successful in New York and in some of the states of the Mississippi Valley.

The Roxbury Russet and other russets are usually successful where the Baldwin thrives.

Clover and Timothy.

Clover and timothy are the main reliance of most farmers for meadows and pastures, with the hope that the natural grasses will "come in" and take the place of the kind sown when they die out, as they often do in a few years. Clover scarcely survives longer than two years, and the timothy lingers along, gradually disappearing until in a few years on light soils, it is all gone Where the aftermath of timothy is not pastured off, the roots will retain their hold on the soil longer; but when the crowns are left bare, it is not uncommon to see a whole field killed out in one winter. In very rich ground clover may be kept alive for several years, but cannot be depended upon longer than for a second crop. More hay can be had from the the usual seeding of clover and timothy than from any other. The clover occupies the land [illegible] almost exclusively; the [illegible] it becomes thinner, [illegible] forms most of the crop [illegible] [illegible] —American [illegible] for April.

[illegible] of curing your sick [illegible] you can so easily obtain [illegible] Liver Pills. They will [illegible] permanent cure. [illegible]

[illegible] Men [illegible] Little Towns.

It is a curious fact that the great majority of the prominent men are from the smaller cities and towns, while on the other hand, the number of those born in the larger cities of the North and West who have written their names high on the roll of political and military fame will scarcely reach a round dozen.

Charles Sumner was from Boston, but his great colleague in the senate, Henry Wilson, came from the insignificant village of Natick, while Generals Butler and Banks and Senators Dawes and Hoar are natives of places but little more important in point of population. Tilden and Arthur were New York city men, but nearly every other New Yorker of prominence—like President Cleveland, Daniel Manning, Horatio Seymour, Conkling, Seward, Greeley and Kernan—had their birth and training in the interior cities. "Sunset" Cox claims New York city for his home, but he made his reputation in congress as a raconteur and wit before he removed to the metropolis and while a resident of the sleepy old town of Zanesville, Ohio.

Sam Randall is the only congressman from Philadelphia in twenty years who is known outside of his state. The other famous Pennsylvanians—Buchanan Stevens, Cameron, Curtin, Meade and Hancock—all hailed from the provinces.

In Ohio the contrast is still more sharpely defined. Ben. Wade, Chase, Stanton, Garfield, Hayes, General and Senator Sherman, Giddings, Thurman, Sheridan and William Allen were in every instance citizens of obscure little that are known only to the world as the homes of these great men. Cincinnati, as an offset to this, has furnished but two men of national prominence since the war—ex-Attorney General Taft and George H. Pendleton.

Chicago has done even less for herself, inasmuch as she has sent but one man, Lyman Trumbull, of first-rate ability to either branch of Congress. Grant, Lincoln, Logan and Yates, the best known names in Illinois politics, laid the foundation of their greatness in the smallest cities and towns of the state. What is true of the statesmen of the past is equally true of those of today. The Morrisons, Springers, Blounts, Hammonds, Butterworths, McKinleys, Reeds, Mills, Holmans, Paysons, Weavers, Reagans and Hendersons, who control the action of the lower house, have their homes in the Waterloos, Macons, Cantons, Auroras, Corsicanas, Palestines, and other unimportant towns in their respective states.

The list might be extended to embrace the leading men of the Senate also, but enough is here given to establish the truth of the proposition that the great men of the nation are of country birth and breeding.

California Oranges.

It has been claimed for California that it is blessed with every climate on the face of the earth, and, in consequence, can produce any fruit grown anywhere else. A few days since a carload of the "California golden seedless oranges," from the Los Angeles orange orchards, arrived in the city of New York. There were between 60,000 and 70,000 oranges in the consignment, and they went through in ten days. Other cars are following bringing 2,000,000 oranges, a portion of the bountiful crop with which Calafornia has been blessed this season. The California seedless orange is pronounced by experts to be the finest fruit in the world, and already commands nearly double the price of the Florida, as they are in great demand by those who have been in California. This special carload came from Pomona, the leading fruit section in Southern California, where oranges grow in perfection. Florida orange growers, who have greatly advanced the quality of their fruit, will have to look to their laurels. The consumption of oranges in this country has more than quadrupled within the last ten years, owing to the cheapness and improved quality of the fruit. The older countries of Europe eat largely of fruit, much more largely than have the people of the United States; but the indications are that this will not be the case ere long.

Horses That Sell Well.

There is no branch of the stock industry that with judicial management, pays better than rearing horses. Farmers may come in for their share of the profits in this industry if they will but exercise common sense. There are enough trotters; remember this and leave their rearing and training to professional breeders. The farmer's opportunity lies in the production of good, serviceable animals, which will sell at a remunative price. Such horses always pay, and there is not half the risk in raising these there is with the lighter and more nervous trotters. It is only about one trotter in 500 that amounts to anything—at least that makes a sufficient good record to pay for his trouble and brings a big sum extra. When a trotter falls below a certain standard he is the most valueless of horses to own.

There is always a ready sale for halfbred percherons, as there is indeed for any good shaped horse that will weigh from 1,200 to 1,500 pounds. The quick stepping ones prove excellent coachers an dare in demand as carriage teams, while the more clumsy, slow going animals prove valuable as cart and truck horses.

Deep Sea Soundings.

The United States commission engaged in deep-sea soundings are making many valuable discoveries. They show that animal life is ripe and active at a depth of 2,000 and 2,500 fathoms. At 1,000 fathoms large crabs have been collected, at 2,574 fathoms a huge lobster was captured. The character of the soil and minerals is another study. In the gulf stream beds of pebbles, rare crystals, and [illegible] were collected. In other [illegible] minerals of various kinds were gathered up. These soundings bid fair to reveal many long hidden secrets which scientific men have longed to know.

Saved His Life.

Mr. D. I. Wilcoxson, of Horse Cave, Ky., says he was, for many years, badly afflicted with Phthisic, also Diabetes; the pains were almost unendurable and would sometimes almost throw him into convulsions. He tried Electric Bitters and got relief from first bottle and after taking six bottles, was entirely cured, and had gained in flesh eighteen pounds. Says he positively believes he would have died, had it not been for the relief afforded by Electric Bittrrs. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by R. E. Phillips.

Don't Experiment.

You cannot afford to waste time in experimenting when your lungs are in danger. Consumption always seems at first, only a cold. Do not permit any dealer to impose upon you with some cheap imitation of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, but be sure you get the genuine. Because he can make more profit he may tell you he has something just as good, or just the same. Don't be deceived, but insist upon getting Dr. King's New Discovery which is guaranteed to give relief in all Throat, Lung and Chest affections. Trial bottles free R. E. Phillips' Drug Store.

Years Teach More Than Books.

Among other valuable lessons imparted by this teacher is the fact that for a very long time Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" has been the prince of liver correctives and blood purifiers, being the household physician of the poor man, and the able consulting physician to the rich patient, and praised by all for its magnificent service and efficacy in all diseases of a chronic nature, as malarial poisoning, ailments of the respiratory and digestive systems, liver disease and in all cases where the use of an alterative remedy is indicated.

FREE TRADE.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has largely benefitted the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen, has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, and the German Syrup for Cough and Lung troubles, have perhaps the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted, in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10 cents remain the same size.

THEY TALKED ABOUT DOGS.

A Little Intellectual Conversation Overheard in a Car.

As we sailed down from Syracuse I fell asleep, but the old gentleman sitting beside me grew so restless and fidgetty that he roused me. In the seat in front of us a young lady and gentleman were carrying on one of those intellectual conversations that are evidently intended for the whole car, and tend to make travel such a rare pleasure to a man who has just escaped from the asylum. I lost the opening chapters of the dialogue, but it was evident that the lady wanted to buy a "dawg," and the gentleman knew all about "dawgs." She wanted a setter. "Red or liver colored?" he asked.

"Oh," she didn't care; just so it was a handsome setter. "I do so love a beautiful setter. And I never had one, and I just long for one."

"Well," he said, "they are beautiful dogs. I couldn't live without dogs. There's something so loving about a dog."

"So human," she said, "so more than human. There is nothing in all this world so devoted as a dog's affection."

"That's so. A dog's love is perfectly unselfish. If you feed him he loves you, if you beat him he still loves you."

"Oh!" she cried, "how can anyone beat a dog! I hate a man who can be so cruel to a dog."

"So do I. I'd shoot a man in a minute if I saw him kick one of my dogs. I have seven dogs."

"Oh! how happy you must be."

"Yes, and there isn't a room in my house too good for those dogs, and they know it, too. You know my big black Newfoundland, St. Augustine Le Claire? I paid one hundred dollars for him. Well, he sleeps in my room and often he climbs right upon the bed and sleeps there."

"Oh! isn't that too cunning for anything!"

Yes, my dogs live all over the house. Then my wife has three dogs of her own, that makes ten altogether. It seems like a good many."

"But yet you couldn't spare one."

"Oh, no. The house would seem lonely without them. They always welcome me when I come home; they're always glad to see me. Last spring when my Siberian bloodhound, Charlemagne, died, I thought my wife would go wild. She cried herself into hysteria, and went to bed, gave up society, put on mourning and locked the piano. I couldn't eat anything myself for days. I felt as though I had lost a son."

"You have children, haven't you, Mr. Kennelthorpe?"

"Oh, yes; I have three, two boys and a girl—no, two girls—no, no; what am I thinking of? They're all girls."

Here the old gentleman collared me and dragged me furiously into the smoking car, where he backed me up against the wood box and held me fiercely by the collar.

"That's the [illegible]," he [illegible] that! One hundred dollars for a dog! Buy all the dogs that ever yelped. I can buy 100 dogs for one dollar, and then I'd keep only one and I'd kill him! Am I right?"

I feebly said "Amen."

"You are saved," he said, relaxing his hold, "and now let us sit down and smoke one of the train-boys non-combustible cigars for I must nerve myself to a deed of awful justice."

"What is't you'll do."

"I am going to kill that man when he gets off the train, and at the same time you will kill the woman, or I shall kill you."

But when we got to Utica they rushed the old gentleman off and took him to the asylum. And I was the only man on the train who knew what drove him mad.—Burdette.

My Pillow and I.

How brave and how strong, in the world's rough crowd,
Where men at the shrine of Mammon are bowed,
How glad and how gay, in the glare of day,
When the din of trade drives sadness away;
And then how feeble and weary and lone,
When night's black wing o'er the world is thrown
How cowardly weak, as I wakeful lie,
Is known but to us—my pillow and I.

Then the loves and hates that I half forget,
In life's busy hours, ere the sun is set,
Are pondered o'er, with a smile or a tear,
And whispered names of the near and dear;
Or I humbly muse on the wasted years
Of a vanished youth, with its hopes and fears,
Till perchance I startle the night with a sigh,
But we're used to that—my pillow and I.

We are good friends my pillow and I;
I tell it my wrongs when no one is nigh;
And it ne'er reveals my confessions weak,
But kisses in pity my feverish cheek,
Nor ever recoils with a feigned alarm
From the rough embrace of my weary arm,
But gives me repose no treasure can buy;
A sacred tie binds us—my pillow and I.

It knows full well in the watches we kee[illegible]
'Twixt a whispered prayer and reluctant sleep—
It knows full well how the shadows last,
Which passion and pride o'er the heart have cast,
And it blots the tears that are vainly shed
Over hopes destroyed, ambitions dead
Then it brings forgetfulness by and by.
And we dream in peace—my pillow and I.

In the days and nights of disease and pain,
It has cooled the fire of a wandering brain;
It has lured me back when I seemed to stand
On the shadowy brink of an unknown land
Yes, tempted me back with its gentle caress,
And soothed with its touches my cruel distress;
Though others prove false, the world I defy.
To part or estrange—my pillow and I.

A Paradox.

The bachelor's lot is lonely and sad,
Poor man!
He hasn't a wife to make his heart glad
He doesn't know how he'd be blessed if he had;
Nor can
He conceive what it is he has lost,
He thinks he has only escaped "being bossed"
Poor man!

Oh, the bachelor's heart is sorry and sore,
Indeed!
He knows he can never know joy any more,
And he looks upon life as a terrible bore,
Agreed
With the croaker that life doesn't pay,
And to all thoughtless lovers impatient to say.
"Take heed!"

Yes, the bachelor's lot is a desolate one,
And yet
There are girls who think it would really be fun
To share it with him, after all's said and done;
Forget
All his miseries many, and pleasures so few,
I know lots of girls who would do it—don't you?
You bet!

Growth of the Methodist Church.]

Figures printed in the Methodist Year Book show that on January 1, 1887 Methodism throughout the world numbered 35,000 traveling preachers and 6,830,000 members. In the United States there are 27,600 traveling preachers and 4,000,000 members, and a population of over 15,000,000, or more than one-fourth the population of the country—56,000,000. The Methodist Episcopal Church alone numbers in the United States, 12,800 traveling preachers and 2,000,000 members, having 20,000 churches, worth $77,000,000, 7,300 parsonages, worth $11,000,000; 144 colleges and other school properties, worth, including endowments, $15,000,000; making a total of $103,000,000.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent].

WASHINGTON, April 8th, 1887.

It looks very much as if the name of Mr. Whitney will live in history as the "Naval Secretary." He has just taken another step towards the improvement and building up of the Navy. This was the sending forth of an announcement inviting sealed proposals from the shipbuilders of the United States for the building of five new iron vessels. All Americans with yards equipped can compete, speed is an important consideration, and extra premium for extra quarter knots is guaranteed contractors.

Three of the vessels are to be cruisers and must be completed within two years. The others are to be gun-boats and must be completed within a year and a half. It is also required that one of the vessels shall be built on or near the Pacific coast, one of them on or near the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, and two of them on or near the coast of the Atlantic ocean.

There has been a good deal of comment here in regard to the withdrawal from the National Drill, which takes place next month, of two prominent Alabama companies, the "True Blues" and the "Greys," because some colored militia will participate in the contest. It is argued by the managers of the coming event that since it is to be a National Encampment and Drill, they have no right, civil, military or moral, to exclude regularly organized soldiery on account of their color. The Drill has the recognition of the Government, in this sense is a National affair, and is simply intended to illustrate the proficiency of volunteer soldiery in the manual of arms and military manœuvres.

The social aspects of the occasion are quite another thing. Soldiers who camp on the same field are not obliged to put up at the same hotel, or eat at the same table. As citizens they are still privileged to select their own associates. Colored troops took part in President Cleveland's inauguration, they were assigned a place in the ceremonies attending the laying of the corner stone of the city hall at Virginia's Capital. The managing committee of the National Drill, which is composed almost exclusively of Democrats and Southern men, did not hesitate to admit the two colored companies which applied for entry. And, indeed, it is not quite clear why the militia system of the country is in any more danger from the colored element, which is lawfully recognized in its organization, than is the regular army, which enlists colored men in its service and converts them into soldiers.

The first day that the Inter-State Commerce Commission was empowered to act judicially, which was on Tuesday (the day the law went into effect) it selected permanent office quarters. The next day it announced its first official act—the suspension of the "long and short haul" clause, as affecting the entire Southern Railway and Steamship Association. It is suspended for a period not to exceed ninety days, and is subject to revocation at any time by the Commission.

The Washington home of the new Commission is in a beautiful new building with white marble front, recently erected by the Baltimore Sun company. Each Commissioner will have a spacious apartment there to himself. Applications for appointments under the Commission continue to come in by every mail. One applicant writes that he is about to take a pleasure trip to Europe, and that should the Commission require his services before the date fixed for his return they may cable him at his expense.

When the champion pugilist of the world visited the White House one day this week, it is alleged that in an unguarded moment he gave expression to the opinion that a series of Turkish baths would improve the President's health. It was fortunate for the muscle developer that he did not belong to the Medical Association of the District of Columbia, or he would be investigated for expressing sentiments so in conflict with the exalted "ethics" of the Medical society.

This is in connection with the ordeal through which Dr. Sowers has just passed for having remarked recently at an evening club that the manner of life pursued by the President was in danger of leading to apoplexy. The Medical Association of this city have discussed Dr. Sowers' comment on the Executive's health quite lengthily. Some hyper ethical doctors that as the President's case was in the hands of another member of the prosession any expression of opinion on the subject was unprofessional and in violation of their code.

There were twenty-one students at a table, and, after each of them had treated, they resolved that the expense should be the bartender's. RETRIBUTION.

BY "THE DUCHESS."

CHAPTER XIX.

Time, in so far as it brings them to the next evening, has not told. The secret still lies within its ancient breast. It has not yet disburdened itself, nor declared aught that might heal the anxiety that rages in the flighty, but kindly, heart of Millicent Grey.

Twenty times during the day she had approached Nadine with a determination to fire off all sorts of point blank batteries—meant to take the girl by storm—and twenty times she had been driven back, routed with great slaughter by the innocence of Nadine's lovely eyes. No; she could not ask a question that would make her friend unhappy, uneasy, distrustful of the man whom, if she did not love, she had at least elected to marry.

So the day wore on, and eventide came and died, and now night is on them, and once again Nadine is standing before her glass—a mirror that reaches from ceiling to floor—regarding with anxious gaze the lovely form that gazes back at her.

Once more she would be beautiful! Once more she would be pleasant in his eyes. His! In comparison with whom all the world is poor.

To-night her gown is blue. A pale electric blue, that throws into purer prominence the startling fairness of her neck and arms. She is lingering now, touching her dress here, and moving a flower there, debating all the while what ornament shall have the honor of lying on her pretty bosom.

Some vague sense of evil had warned her against the cross. No, she would not wear that. It had distressed dear Lady Valworth, had whitened her face and made her kind lips stern; some old memory, sad and angry, had been brought to mind by it. Not only that first time when she had given way to an exclamation, but again that second time when he—Maurice—Mr. Duran—had led her up to where she stood, Lady Valworth had seemed pained, sad, cold, unable to give her the kindly smile that, up to the wearing of that luckless cross, had ever greeted her. No; certainly she will not wear it—but——

There is the sapphire pendant. That lovely, sparkling thing that Paul, too, had given her, and that as yet has never graced her neck. True, he had warned her not to wear either it or the cross in common! He had got them through his business in some strange way he had failed to explain. They were valuable; too valuable to be worn publicly as yet, until he had made his fortune and hers. Too valuable to be worn at Mrs. Brand's, for example. He had, indeed, made her give her promise not to wear them at Mrs. Brand's, and she had faithfully kept that promise.

But there! He had not surely calculated on the fact that she would ever be here—in such a house as this. If he had known, he would have been the first to tell her to make herself look as charming as was possible to her. He would have had her no whit behind the rest. The very fact that she does not love him has made her the more particular in the matter of obeying him, and now a little pang shoots across her heart as she wonders whether she had been deaf to his desires when she hung that diamond cross last night around her neck. Certainly it had brought her no delight—no luck. It had hurt Lady Valworth, her kind friend. It had hurt Duran, too, in some odd way. She could not tell how exactly, but he had asked her one or two questions about it, and had refrained from praise of it, even when she laid it in his palm for inspection.

No; not the cross. The sapphire pendant, rather. She lifts it from its case, and raises her arms above her head and clasps it round her neck. As she sees it glittering upon her lovely skin, she smiles softly to herself, and bends forward full of girlish delight at the beauty of it, and tells herself that Lady Valworth will be pleased to see her thus bedecked out to do honor to the home-coming of her son, Capt. Boyle—this dearly loved son, who, to Nadine, is as yet unknown, but of whom she has heard so much.

With a last lingering glance at the mirror, that gives her back her charms so truly, she leaves the room. As yet it is early for the arrival of guests, and as she enters the huge ball room she finds it almost deserted. The fiddlers are tuning their instruments in a monotonous lugubrious way, and one or two people are laughing at the lower end of the room. The lights as yet are dim, and Nadine can scacely see them. She walks quickly in their direction, her heart beating gladly with a sense of youth and joy, that no misery in the future has power to kill. As she draws nearer the laughter she can see that her two or three have developed into a group. Duran is here, and Gerald Massareene; Mrs. Brand and Millicent.

As Nadine comes up to them some of the servants turn up the lights to the fullest, and quite a glow of brightness is flung upon the room. Duran steps forward to greet Nadine. He says nothing to her, but only holds out his hand as if in welcome. In reality, the soft sweet beauty of her has entered into him and stricken him dumb. The lamps are shining upon her starry eyes, her red parted lips, her face so like a flower. The dainty, shy glance, that half bespeaks the praise and half decries it; the lovely kissable mouth, that would fain say, "Am I not good to look at, dear, my love?" yet dreads to say it; the bent, yet proud little head, the tender, longing smile, all appeal to him. His hand closes upon hers. She is his at this moment, whatever other forlorn times the years may hold for him and her, and with the eager hand clasp he leads her forward to where the lamps shine clearest—to where all may see how fair his love can be.

He turns to make some gay remark to Millicent, still holding Nadine's hand, but a glance at Miss Grey's face checks him. She has grown positively livid. She was full of laughter just a minute ago, but now mirth has died from her and her lips are all set and stern, her color ghastly.

"Take her away—anywhere! Into the next room," she says in a tone of suppressed but passionate command to Duran. There is no need for him to ask to whom she alludes—her eyes are riveted upon Nadine's neck, where the sapphire pendant is resting calmly. Duran, who is a man quick to understand, scenting danger in the air for her he loves draws Nadine aside and presently takes her out of the room. A little too late, however. Mrs. Brand too had seen and recognised the sapphires!

The guests have all arrived, the ball is at its height. Yet still the hero of it is absent. There is, however, a midnight train that will in all probability bring him.

"It must. He has never failed me yet," says Lady Valworth, with a rather wan smile, who is feeling hurt and disappointed.

Millicent, who has been going about with a nervous distressed air all the night has been regarded as a model fiancee by all her world. [illegible]

Duran had made it a first care to learn the cause of Miss Grey's desire to get rid of Nadine as soon as her glance fell upon her in the ball room. What he had been told since by Millicent had led him at once to a knowledge of the truth. He was already aware of the suspicion about the diamond cross worn by Nadine the night before. It is now impossible to him to disbelieve but that this lover of Nadine's—this Paul Annerley—had something to do with the robberies both of the diamonds from Valworth, and the famous sapphires from Park lane. If this be true! If this be proved! He is angry with himself for the wild thrill of joy that rushes through every pulse, as this thought suggests itself and takes root within his breast. If it prove true! Why then Nadine will be free! This man, Annerley, will be compelled to fly from the face of the law, and she will be left behind for him—Duran—and for love!

But then the shame to her! The awakening to the sorrow of her lover's infamy. Sooner or later it must be told to her, but should the task be left to rude tongues who had no love for her? A thousand times no. Be the man falsely suspected, or be he in reality the one who has stolen the jewels, it is impossible that Nadine should be left to learn of the suspicion resting upon him from strangers. He—will tell her.

He has led her into a small conservatory leading off the tea room, which, being rather public, has been deserted by those desirous of uttering or hearing tender passages. The upper end of it, overlooking in daytime a garden beneath, is quite removed from the gaze of those in the room outside, and Duran, as Nadine sinks upon a low couch, seats himself beside her.

A dim lamp, shaded to a subdued pink, sheds a warm but indistinct light around. The perfume of the dying roses fills the air. From far away the music comes to them—rising, falling, swelling, fainting, until all the night seems full of it.

Nadine, stooping toward him, lays her hand on his.

"You are troubled?" she says, softly. "I can see it in your eyes. Something is making you sorry."

Her eyes, deep and brilliant as stars, are looking mournfully into his. He possesses himself of the hand she has held out to him, believing him in trouble, and holds it fast.

"It is true. There is perplexity in my heart, and a suspicion of coming sorrow, but it is for you," he answers, gently.

"For me!" A little startled look creeps into her lovely face.

"Tell me—tell me exactly, says Duran, leaning forward so that he can see her face more clearly; "tell me, for your own sake, how you became the possessor of that sapphire heart that lies upon your neck.

"What a strange question," cries she, paling. "It was given me—it was a present from Paul Annerley.

"And the diamond cross you wore last night—he gave you that also?

"Yes; he gave me both. She has grown very white, and her large eyes are filled with a painful uncertainty. "Why do you question me about them?" she says. "Is it strange that I should have such pretty things? I did not want them—I do not care for them. But why is it strange?"

"The strangeness does not lie in your having them," returns Duran, still holding her hand fast, though she had tried to take it from him. "It lies in the fact that this Paul Annerley gave them to you."

"Where did he get them?"

"Ah! explain yourself!" implores she, rising to her feet and drawing back from him. "Your face, your voice, betray you! There is something terrible yet to be said. Say it!"

"There is this," says Duran, rising also. "The diamond cross you wore last night was stolen from Lady Valworth; the sapphires you wear to-night are part of the sapphire set that was taken from Miss Grey in Park lane!"

CHAPTER XX.

A silence, intense, horror stricken, follows on his words. Miss Roche has fallen back from him, and is now leaning against the wall, with her hands clasped upon her bosom, and her eyes, large and affrighted, fixed on his.

"Stolen!" she says, the words coming with difficulty through her white lips. "Do they think I stole them?" She shrinks backward against the wall as though she would fain sink through it, and so disappear forever.

"Oh, no! Good heavens! No!" replies he, shocked. "But this man Annerley. It is essential that he should be found and compelled to say where he got them. You say you don't know his address, but surely it may be discovered."

"Have they been thinking that?" says Nadine, heedless of his last words. "And you, have you, too"— She breaks off as though the power to go on is lost to her. Her blanched face terrifies him.

"My darling! Don't look at me like that. Nadine! Who is accusing you? Who suspects you? Be reasonable."

"Lady Valworth suspects me. I see it all now, though I did not understand before why she was so cold to me all to-day. She thinks most cruelly, most unjustly of me. Oh! what shall I do?"

"Nothing now. To-morrow you must give us any help you can toward finding Mr. Annerley. No doubt," with a quick contraction of the brows," he will be able to explain to us in a satisfactory manner how these jewels came into his possession."

"What a terrible situation," says Nadine, faintly. She covers her eyes with her hands. "If I had only obeyed him. If I had followed his injunctions not to wear these fatal ornaments."

"He advised you not to wear them?" Duran's voice is sharp and keen.

"Yes. But only because he believed them too handsome for me, just now, when we were both poor. Afterward, he said, when he had made his fortune, they would suit me well."

"Did it not strike you that it was strange for a man calling himself poor to be able to purchase such costly things?"

"I did not think. I seldom thought of him." Her tone is low and self reproachful. "How strong is fate," she says presently. "To drive me here—to compel me to wear what I had never worn before. But I am not regretful," cries she, suddenly, with a touch of vehemence. "He will be able to explain, of course. And now Lady Valworth and Millicent will get back their own."

She tears off the sapphire ornament and throws it into Duran's palm with a shudder.

"I must see Lady Valworth. I must speak with her," exclaims Nadine, eagerly. Her cheeks are burning, her hands tremulous.

"Wait until to-morrow."

"I shall not wait another moment. I cannot live with this weight upon my heart." She presses her hands convulsively against her breast. "Take me to her," she implores, faintly.

Seeing the excitement that is betraying itself in glance and gesture, Duran draws her hand through his arm and leads her from the [illegible] room is now deserted, [illegible] into the hall without [illegible]. Midnight chimes from some distant tower, the solemn sound breaking even through the light sparkling dance music [illegible]

"The last train is in. I am afraid Lady Valworth will be taken up with her son. He has surely arrived, or is on the point of arriving," says Duran to his companion in a low tone. "Nevertheless, we will try if it be possible to see her alone for even a few minutes."

A servant gives them the information that her ladyship has just passed into the library in momentary expectation of Capt. Boyle's arrival. There they find her with Millicent, whom she has entreated to stay with her, and Sir Thomas.

As Nadine and Duran enter Sir Thomas is expostulating a little on his wife's desertion of her guests.

"It will be but for a little while, a few moments," returns she eagerly. "He must, he will come by this train; and Clarissa" (Mrs. Brand) "has taken my place. I shall not be missed for half an hour, and he is sure to come straight here."

She looks up rather impatiently as Nadine comes into the room. The girl is white as death and trembling with agitation. Going up to Lady Valworth, she lays the sapphire pendant upon the table near her.

"Lady Valworth," she says gently, her voice low and earnest, "it is only just now that I have heard from Mr. Duran about this," pointing to the sapphires. "And your diamond cross—it is upstairs—you shall have it in a few moments. But what I want to say is—is"— She falters. It is evident in her excitement she has forgotten what it was she had arranged to say. "I knew nothing of it," she breaks out at last pitifully, her large eyes fixed with mournful entreaty upon Lady Valworth.

That kind woman is touched to the quick. Indeed, she had never suspected Nadine of being anything but a victim in the matter, although her perplexity during the day had led her into a coldness of manner that the girl had misconstrued.

"My dear child, what a miserable idea for you to get into your head,!" she cries, kindly. "Come, now, I will have only happy faces round me to-night, when my son is expected. It is his birth night, as you know; we must give him only smiles. As for our lost jewels, to-morrow you will give me any information you can, and probably you will be the one to restore them to me."

She pressed Nadine's hand kindly.

"You should not have told her to-night!" exclaims Millicent, looking reproachfully at Duran.

"Oh, it is better so—much better," says Nadine. "It would have been horrible to wear that stolen ornament a moment longer."

At this moment the door is thrown wide open, and a tall man enters the room. Lady Valworth, with a little cry, rushes forward to greet him. She has forgotten everything, except that this is her son, and that he has returned to her.

But a movement on Nadine's part checks her. The girl, too, after an instant's stunned surprise, has taken a few steps forward and thrown out her arms in the direction of the new comer.

"Why! There he is! There he is himself!" she cries in a clear voice, touched by excitement. "Now he is come, he will explain all!"

"He! What should he have to explain?" demands Lady Valworth, stopping short and fixing a stern glance upon her.

"He will tell you how he got the diamonds, the sapphires, that he gave me!" returns Nadine eagerly, her eyes brilliant, her lips apart.

Some color has risen to her face.

"What farce is this you would play, girl?" exclaims Lady Valworth, in a low but terrible tone.

"That"—pointing to where the tall figure stands in the doorway—"is my son—Granit Boyle!"

"Madame! that is—Paul Annerley!"

The Poor Little Ones.

We often see children with red eruptions on face and hands, rough, scaly skin, and often sores on the head. These things indicate a depraved condition of the blood. In the growing period, children have need of pure blood to build up strong healthy bodies. If Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" is given, the blood is purged of its bad elements, and the child's development will be healthy, and as it should be. Scrofulous affections, rickets, fever-sores, hip-joint disease or other grave maladies and suffering are sure to result from neglect and lack of proper attention to such cases.

Of the 50,000 fourth class post-offices, 40,000 have been supplied with democratic postmasters, Prince Bismark expects to die between 1890 and 1894. He is about 73 years of age.

An Imperative Necessity.

What pure air is to an unhealthy locality, what spring cleaning is to the neat housekeeper, so is Hood's Sarsaparilla to everybody, at this season. The body needs to be thoroughly renovated, the blood purified and vitalized, the germs of disease destroyed. Scrofula, Salt Rheum, and all other blood disorders are cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, the most popular and successful spring medicine.

A Remarkable Case

Oct. 21st, 1886.

MESSRS. W. H. HOOKER & Co.

Gentlemen—About three years ago my little grandchild (now nearly five years of age) was stricken with Eczema. Beginning in a mild form he slowly but surely became worse until his life was despaired of. Six months ago he had scrofulus looking sores, characteristic of Eczema, completely covering his face and body, effecting his hands to such an extent that his finger nails came off. Such was his alarming condition that it left me little hope of his recovery. I, as a last extremity, resorted to all the remedies advertised as good for Eczema, not only that, have consulted many physicians, including nine weeks treatment at the Oswego Hospital. From this treatment, the very best to be secured in this vicinity, the child derived little or no benefit. I wish to state these facts in detail so you may fully understand (as I do) the remarkable success I have met with in using Dr Acker's Blood Elixir. Added to my own convictions the fact that physicians failed, giving up the case as incurable, I am only happy to assure you that the child owes its life to Dr. Acker's Blood Elixir. He is apparently in the road to entire recovery, in the near future. I cheerfully confirm and attest to the above and believe others (from my statement) suffering, may have reason to believe in the efficacy of this excellent remedy. Very Truly,

MRS. LESAGE.

Pain in the Back.

Rev. Theodore Gerrish now settled over a Methodist church in Biddeford, Me., was formerly a resident of Bangor. While there he became afflicted with Kidney Disease. The symptoms of this too common trouble are a drawing down pain across the back extending downwards towards the loins, scanty and high colored urine, a tired feeling, restlessness, etc. These Mr. Gerrish had to such an extent as to make it impossible to continue his labors and he resigned, devoting his time to the regaining of his health. To this end he employed various physicians, tried many of the so called remedies, visited different places hoping a change of climate might improve his condition, but failed to gain the desired relief. Returning to Bangor he learned from a member of his family that she had been greatly benefited by the use of Brown's Sarsaparilla, and was advised to give it a trial. Mr. Gerrish did so, and to his great surprise found, after a few days, that his condition had improved. The tired feeling left him, the pains across the back grew gradually less and in time disappeared; he rested well at night; the whole system was invigorated and toned up, until feeling that he was free from the Kidney disease that had so strong a hold on him, he re-entered upon the duties of the ministry, and, as we have said, is now located in Biddeford. In addition to his testimonial Mr. Gerrish has strongly endorsed Brown's Sarsaparilla for the reason that it is not composed of alcoholic stimulants that afford only temporary relief, but of pure vegetable productions well known for their effective action on the Kidneys, Liver and Blood.

The Emigration of the World.

Recent statistics show that 19,000,000 of people are residing in other than their native country. In England there are 208,000 foreigners; in Russia, 344,000; France, 1,001,000; Switzerland, 211,035; Austria, 182,676; Belgium, 146,665; Holland, 69,971: Italy, 59,956; Scandinavia, 50,968; Spain, 41,763.

In North America there are 7,300,042 foreigners; in South America, 6,033,105; in Asia, 1,584,344, and in Africa, 140,383.

England takes the lead in the number of people that leave her shores. At the present time 4,200,000 of her sons are scattered over the world. Germany comes next with a total of 2,601,000; strangely enough 83,000 of these are residing in France alone, while 2,000,000 are in the United States. The other nations rate in the following order: Italy, 1,000,000; Scandinavia, 795,070; Belgium, 497,000; France, 382,662; Spain, 453,400; Austria, 337,000, of whom 118,000 reside in Germany.

A Popular Cyclopedia.

A Cyclopedia which presents concise and readable biographical sketches together with choice and characteristic selections from the writings of eminent authors of all ages and nations, surely ought to be in great popular demand if its cost were not prohibitory. Such a work is Alden's Cyclopedia of Universal Literature, Volume VI. of which, now published contains 479 pages, large type beautifully printed and bound, and includes within it the names of eighty-two eminent authors, among which are: Dana, Dante, Darwin, Daudet, Jefferson Davis, Sir Humphry Davy, Defoe, (of Robinson Crusoe fame), Demosthenes, DeQuincey, Descartes, Dickens, Disraeli, Doddridge, and Douglas. It would seem hardly possible to plan any literary work more eminently readable and interesting, if the compiling and editing were well done—and the nearly universal verdict seems to be that this IS very well done indeed. And the price! Only the Literary Revolution could have accomplished such a wonder—50 cents a volume for these beautiful cloth-bound books, or 60 cents for half-morocco binding! The publisher offers a sample volume to anyone with privilige of return if not satisfactory. Anyone interested in high-class literature ought to send for Mr. Alden's 64-page Catalogue of Standard Books, which is free to any applicant. Address JOHN B. ALDEN, Publisher, 393 Pearl street, New York; Clark and Adams Sts., Chicago; or, 420 Yonge street, Toronto.

Ex-Judge D. D. McKoon.

This gentleman who was born in the town of Schrœppel, received his education at Falley seminary in this village and was a former member of the Oswego county bar received the following tribute in a recent issue of the Financial Review, published on Wall street New York city:

"Among the prominent members of the bar of this city, whose careers are interesting and instructive reading, especially as showing other members of the legal and other professions what may be accomplished by the proper use of such abilities as have been bestowed upon them, and of the advantages cast in their way, we take Ex-Judge D. D. McKoon as a good illustration. Mr. McKoon is one of our most highly respected members of the bar, and one whose success in life has been well merited. He began his honorable career in humble circumstances, gradually ascending, and is to-day not only in the foremost rank of his profession but one of the best known of our public spirited citizens.

Mr. McKoon is a native of this state and has held several important official positions, in all of which he has gained the respect and esteem of all who have been acquainted with him. His practice in this city is of a large and influential character, and has long since rewarded him with a comfortable competence, a result which has been amply merited in the truest sense of the term. Few members of the bar are better known and esteemed in court than he, and his equitable methods and strict integrity have gained for him the good will of all who know him. In view of these facts it is not astonishing that Mr. McKoon should hold his present honored position, and it is only to be regretted that there are not many more such members of the profession which he so ably represents."

The Syracuse Journal appeared on Monday last fresh from its new Hoe press increased in size by the addition of one column to each page and the pages lengthened. Our congratulations are extended to the Journal on this indication of its prosperity and on the facilities that it now possesses for supplying its thousands of patrons. It is deserving of all the success it has attained.

A Poem.

Composed by Mr. N. Lester and read by that gentleman before the reading circle at Oswego Falls, Friday, April 15.

The sounds that greet us wafted by the breezes
  Bring us assurance that it must be spring;
The human family both coughs and sneezes:
  The early robin tries his best to sing.

It is the time when blooms each plant aquatic;
  The vernal days when everything seems young—
When eastern zephyrs torture the rheumatic;—
  The gentle spring-time oft by poets sung.

The days of cowslips, daffodils and ducklings,
  Of pansies and of lilies of the vale;
The days of early lambs and bovine sucklings;
  The days of ham, with eggs that are not stale.

The rays of tender poetry and chickens,
  When Sol his warming beams upon us sheds;
When chill north breezes sometimes raise "the Dickens"
  And give us inflammation in our heads.

It is the season when our reading closes;—
  The breath of spring our dormant zeal revives;
Supplanting the fierce blasts that blued our noses,
  And sets us whipping carpets for our wives.

The days grow long, and longer grow our labors
  The evening fireside we must now forsake,
Ransack the woodshed—interview the neighbors,
  In search of barrow, hoe, spade and rake.

Each busy dame, brim full of inspiration
  From dreams, or memories of the springtimes past,
Will find the entire household occupation,
  And oft her grumbling swain condemn to fast.

And as the time of warmth and bloom advances
  The garden's precinct her attentions claim:
The fragrant onion on her vision glances,
  With lettuce crisp and rhadishes the same.

Josiah's wife, with pen neglected lying
  Will spend her energies, the milk to strain;
To feed the hens, and hunt for eggs outlying,
  Nor write us more till winter comes again.

And so, adue to thee, "Sweet Swan of Avon;"
  We close our ears to thy delightful notes,
Till earth again its snowy robe shall have on,
  And we our mittens and overcoats.

We have no choice, we must forego our reading;
  The season claims what cannot be denied;
To the inevetable then conceding,
  We close our books and lay our pens aside.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, April 12th, 1887.

Public attention is now concentrated upon the National drill which takes place in this city next month. The color line crisis has been safely passed, the movement towards the re-organization of the local militia, putting the companies in a position to compete for the prizes, goes briskly forward, the month of the drill is nearly here, the securing of hotel accomodations has begun, and many other indications point to the fact that the assemblage of the Republic's militia, and of all who delight in the military, will soon be here. Washington fresh and charming in her new spring suit of green, will gladly welcome the thousands of visitors who flock to her reception in May, and aside from all interest in the drill it is worth a trip of any distance to see the most beautiful city in America in her best attire.

The warm, bright sunshine of Easter Monday seemed warmer and brighter in the neighborhood of the White House than anywhere else in this city. Thousands of children, without regard to race, color, or previous condition, thronged the grounds of the Chief Magistrate for the purpose of rolling and "picking" eggs. It is an annual privilege costume that has long accorded the youth of the District. They have the entire freedom of the grounds an Easter Monday. They take possession early in the morning bring their lunches and nurses, roll themselves over the greensward when they are tired of rolling eggs, and never desert the sport until nightfall.

One feature of the egg festival was its effect upon the reception to the public at the White House. Many of the festive little ones made free to enter and swelled the attendance to about 1,500 people. One fifth of that number is a pretty good crowd on these tri-weekly occasions. The children were English, Irish, French, Spanish, German, Italian, Dutch and Dannish. At first the President attempted to give each one a greeting wish some special remark, but this generous intention was over come in a few minutes and 'ere long he was trying to shake hands with three of them at a time. There were humble white folks and aristocratic black folks, and they laid their hands in the Executive palm with equal confidence. Occasionally a tow headed boy soiled and hot from his morning's sport, would march up solemnly put his dirty egg-smeared fingers in the Presidential hand, and slink off as though he had done something he was ashamed of.

Since the Inter-State Commerce law went into effect the number of personal applications for appointments under the Administration at Washington has diminished very materially. The canceling of free passes has caused a marked falling off in the number of callers at the Goverment Departments from the various States and Territories, and it will pretty effectually stop the coming of delegations and individuals to urge appointments and press their claims here. Heretofore a day never passed without such delegations at all of the Departments, but especially would they infest that of the Interior. They would come from the Pacific coast and the far Northwest, and often just in the hope of securing the pettiest office.

Probably the most absurd of all complaints made against civil-service reform is the charge that it will lead to the establishment of an office holding aristocracy. Any one who examines the lists of thousand dollar Secretaries of Senators, of committee clerks, attached to both houses of Congress, of unclassified officers in the Departments here in Washington, and of the occupants of the most comfortable berths in custom houses, federal courts, the postal service international revenue and pension offices all over the country, will be astonished at the number of sons, brothers cousins, nephews, sisters, nieces and aunts who are drawing incomes from the National Treasury.

Only last week a Senator's was appointed to be chief of division in one of the Washington departments, and another Senator's son received a clerical position under the Inter-State Commerce commission. This is not saying that the fact of one citizen's relationship to another ought to operate as a bar to his official aspirations. But all of these above mentioned places are beyond the reach of the civil-service rules.

It would be scarcely possible for a more offensive form of aristocracy to to obtain than this, which is under the old system of patronage. The new rules restrict admission to the civil service to persons of approved education and intelligence, extend to rich and poor, weak and powerful alike, and give the Government clerk after his installation a sense of security so long as he does his work well and behaves himself in other respects.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE.

The May number of Lippincott's Magazine opens with a complete novel by Capt. Charles King, U. S. A., whose "Colonel's Daughter" placed him at the head of all the American novelists of army life. "The Deserter" will advance his reputation. It is bright, vivacious, full of dash and vigor, and its plot is of unusual interest. Mrs. Poultney Biglow, who, as "Daniel Buxum," made a great hit in the pages of "Outing," by her short story "Mars and Mammon," contributes a tale called "The Madisons' Butler." J. S. of Dale has a pleasant little Satire—"The Fable of the Poet and the Tarpin-Hauler." Henry Chadwick discusses "The New Rules of Base-Ball." An article of exceptional interest to women is that on "Social life at Vassar," by L. R. Smith, an undergraduate now taking the course, and therefore qualified to speak by the card. The series of undergraduate essays on social life at our principal colleges, of which this is the second. is exciting wide spread interest among students and alumni. The poetry of the number is contributed by May Riley Smith and F. D. Stickney. The Monthly Gossip and Book-Talk are as readable as ever.

ST. NICHOLAS FOR MAY.

The number opens with a beautiful frontispiece illustrated, by Blum, to "Catarina of Venice," the "Historic Girl" whose romantic history is related by E. S. Brooks; while Nora Perry, in "An Only Daughter," tells of a very modern and unhistoric girl, whose story is, however, none the less interesting on that account.

How many boys who whistle "Marching Through Georgia" know the story of Sherman's March to the Sea"? General Adam Badeau tells it in the May St. Nicholas and it reads like a tale of adventure—which in fact it is—the biggest adventure in modern times. It is illustrated by Theodore Davis, who was with Gen. Sherman on the march, and by E. W. Kemble, W. L. Shepard, and W. Taber. There is also begun in this number a three part-story of life at the U. S. Millitary Academy at West Point, by a recent graduate. It is entitled "Winning a Commission," and shows how the future Shermans of our country are being turned out. There is another collection of "St Nichalas Dog Stories,"—one for girls, by Celia Thaxter; one for boys, by E. P. Roe, and three for everybody by other people. The "Brownies" go canoeing, perhaps a little early in the season, but none the less merrily.

Rose Hawthorne Lathrop contributes a clever little story, called "Lindie's Portrait," with a drawing by Frank Day; Alice Wellington Rollins has a bright sketch of a "Rainy May Day in Central Park," illustrated by Jessie Curtis Shepard; there is a droll account of "Doll's Hospitals," by Hope Howard; and the first of series of "Child Sketches, from George Eliot," by Julia Magruder.

The serials "Juan and Juanita," by Frances Courtenay Baylor, and "Jenny's Boarding-house," by James Otis, contain chapters of progressive interest; and there are other contributions by Alfred Brennan, Frank Dempster Sherman, Joel Stacy and others.

The price paid for the first book ever printed was $18,000. It was bought in London the other day, and was an edition of the bible in two volumes.

NEW YORK LETTER.

Columbia's Centennial—A Hundred Years of College Life—A City Silhouette—Where Vice Stalks Abroad.

[Special to THE TIMES.]

Columbia with its thousand or more students and its honorable Alumni has during the past week celebrated the centennial of its history. The city was in a blaze of glory while the students yelled their college cry to the utmost extent of their lung power and the grave, reverend seignors who represented the alumni of the institution trod the streets in the procession from the college building to the big Opera House on Broadway with much of their earlier vigor. It was a notable gathering that assembled in the Opera House and right royally was the first hundred years of Columbia's history celebrated. The first hundred years, that's a misnomer, for she has had a longer history of years than that.

Columbia under the title of King's College was organized in 1754. It continued to exist under than name until 1776 when it suspended operations during the period of the war. Its president Dr. Cooper having strong Tory sentiments, took French leave over the back fence, and as rapidly as his infirmities would allow him, sought the shelter of his countrymen on board the man-of-war Kingfisher. The most distinguished graduates during Dr. Cooper's presidency were John Jay and Alexander Hamilton. In 1787 the name was changed to Columbia, so that the celebration was in honor of the new name. The original college buildings stood about a block in the rear of St Paul's church on Broadway and the campus extended down to the riverside. From 1787 the Columbia students received instruction in that building until the demands of trade made an uptown site necessary. About twenty-five years ago the college was removed to its present place near 49th street and Madison Avenue. The land had been part of the Crown grant to old King's college which had furnished to Columbia an income. The occasion of this centennial was made especially prominent by the conferring of degrees. Men and women in the world of letters were honored.

Columbia is now a University with 1,200 students and is rapidly becoming a very formidable rival to the older institutions, Yale and Harvard.

* *

A friend asked me the other day where a stranger desirous of seeing a good phaze of city life should go. I replied "To the Bowery." Let me give you as best I can a pen picture. It begins at Chatham square and ends at that noble institution, Cooper Union. To the east is the densely populated tenement house district inhabited by Germans, Irish and Jews. To the west the notorious Baxter, Mulberry and Mott streets with their population of Italians and Chinese. The Bowery is the great emporium for the spending money of its adjacent population. There is plenty of light. Every store or almost every store has its electric lights. Light, full of vice, teeming with humanity, the haunt of the sharper, the parade ground of the fallen, that's the Bowery. The respectable and the outcast jostle each other. Let's begin at the Cooper Union. The time of your stroll must be evening. The first half mile shows stores, displaying cheap jewelry, sandwiched between other stores where clothing or rum offers inducements to the unwary. The next half-mile shows dens, saloons, disreputable places in abundance. You pass loud-voiced women, soddened-faced men, jolly Germans, dirty, greasy Italians. Now come to the dime museum section. Here is one. Lot's enter. Outside the glaring poster, the loud-voiced but poorly paid runner, shouting the glories of the inside. Within a poor specimen of humanity grinding an organ while ranged around the room are human monstrosities that excite pity and give a sickening sense of the depravity of the human kind. Bowery museum are all alike. The lower end nearest Chatam Square is the abode of more sharp practice, more drunkeness, more sin against social laws than any other section in the city. The respectable man whose circumstances make him live in the section east of the Bowery reaches his home at a reasonable time. At 10 p. m. the Bowery is given up to the corner rowdy, the drunken, screaming Magdalen, and the ones whom society repels. The blaze of the electric lamps deters not one whit from the enactment of scenes usually supposed to occur under the cover of darkness. See, there's an officer of the law. Stalwart is he, apparently the beau ideal of the city's guardian. Here comes a tough-looking party. Do you observe the familiarity of greeting? They know each other. There is no fear of the bluecoat suffering harm in the so-called discharge of duty. The Bowery is the great promenade. Home is an unknown word to the east Bowery population. The influences of home are lost and the Bowery becomes the refuge for the boys and girls, the youths, the young men and women. What wonder that the ranks of crime and vice are so readily recruited.

The man who wishes to study the social problems of the day has a wonderful field for observation in the Bowery of this city. WANDERER.

One of the Finest.

As spring approaches each year, women in every walk in life begin to think of many things that it is almost imperative that they should have to wear. The winter wraps must give way to lighter ones, the heavier dresses to summer fabrics, the muff to light gloves, the winter hat to the spring bonnet and so on in an endless variety of things. Our local merchants are always on the alert to meet the wants of the gentler sex and make extensive purchases of spring goods to supply the demand for those in every condition in life, rich or poor, leaving no excuse for persons who go to larger places to secure what they may desire in this line.

In conformity with his usual custom F. E. Bacon gave on Thursday last what is termed his opening day, and all day long as well as in the evening, crowds were to be seen pouring into his stores to examine his truly fine display. Artistic skill in the arrangement and display of goods adds fifty per cent. to their beauty in the eyes of the ladies. Mr. Bacon and his able assistants are fully aware of this and the beautifully arranged goods on that day reflects great credit on all who took part in their arrangement. Fred Kenyon, the blind musician, was present during the day and evening and discoursed fine music. The millinery department under the charge of Miss Mary O'Hare appeared to excellent advantage, the windows were nicely decorated with real and artificial flowers. A floral star surrounded by a crescent of roses attracted much attention. The ready trimmed hats and elegant display of trimmings were much admired. A canopy or arch covered with handkerchiefs appeared as one entered the north door on First street beneath which was a small figure dressed in red cashmere. Elevated shelves tastefully arranged into booths on either side while in the background hosiery, table linen and other important features were shown. The very handsome line of silk surahs and radahmas, the fine display of worsted and summer fabrics, the jet trimmings in all shades and varieties, the parasols and fans, the sateens and cambrics displayed in large pyramids at the Oneida street entrance were all features that were not overlooked but must be seen to be appreciated.

Fulton in Oswego.

"The Social Glass," which was recently produced with such marked success at Stephens opera house by the Father Mathew Dramatic Society of this village, will be given this evening at the Casino, Oswego. In addition to the drama there will be music by Bogue's Orchestra, accompanied by Miss Frances Bogue, graduate of New England Conservatory at Boston. Vocal music by Misses Maggie Darby, Lena Hardy, and Miss Anna Bogue of Fulton. Recitation by Miss Nellie Healey. Selections by Miss Celia Kelley. Wonderful club swinging by the celebrated artists, Coleman and O'Hare. Fifteen minutes address, on Coercion, Knights of Labor, and Temperance, Rev. Wm. J. Earley. A special train on the R. W. & O. road will leave the Broadway depot this evening at 6:26 returning at 11:30. Tickets for the round trip, including admission to the entertainment 60 cents. A large number is expected to attend.

Illegal Voting.

Daniel Allen, who was arrested and plead guilty to the charge of illegal voting, having voted in Granby, where he lives, at town meeting and four weeks later in Volney at the charter election, was sentenced Friday to 100 days in the Onondaga penitentiary by Police Justice VanWagenen. Allen claimed that parties induced him to vote and that these parties were Fred Sharp and Geo. Brown. They were placed under arrest but sufficient proof was not produced against them and they were discharged.

Don't fail to see all the latest spring novelties at the "Bee Hive." Opening Days, Friday and Saturday.

The Thomson-Houston Electric Company have entered into a contract with the village board to light the streets of this village for $1,500. They are to supply 3 more lights than the number that are now in operation. The price is certainly reasonable and as the large water-wheel, "Hercules" is now running, plenty of power is secured.

Push. Get in. Advertise it. Talk about it, and talk favorably. If you have any property, improve it, Paint your houses; clean up your back yards. Make your surroundings, and you will feel better and your property will be worth more dollars in the market. If you are doing reasonably well, advise your friends to come and invest near you. All kinds of stock, except sheep and swine, have decreased in value in Dakota.

New York state does not produce, probably one half the grain consumed within its borders.

There are now 5,000,000 owners of farms in this country.

A factory has been built in Florida for the production of wine from oranges.

In California sheep are advancing in price, but horses, mules, cattle and hogs are much lower in price than they were two years ago.

The past winter proved one of the coldest for many years in the northern states, and the warmest in nearly all the southern states.

Over $2,400,000,000 is the esimated value of the horses, mules, cows, oxen and other cattle, sheep and swine in this country on Jan. 1, 1887.

The Beauty of Hebron potato has become one of the leading varieties for general culture in Great Britain.

It is said that not less than 2,000,000 pounds of dried sage leaves are used annually in the United States for various purposes.

Since Jan. 1 there have been exported from this country 20,034 barrels of apples, 9,709 barrels of beans, 1,248,300 barrels of flour, 33,047 bushels of oats and 8,641,703 bushels of wheat.

Don't jump into the poultry business on a large scale at one leap. It is not as easy as many suppose to keep a large number of fowls.

The best land for asparagus is a deep sandy loam. Any soil that is mellow and not lumpy and free from stones will answer; stones and lumps make the sprouts grow crooked.

The trade in American apples in England is growing steadily and will continue to do so if care is taken to pack none but first class fruit and brand it with a trade mark.

It is a great help in plowing corn stubble to have the hard stubs broken down and the surface loosened by thorough dragging. This work may be done as soon as the frost is out of the ground, and several days before the soil is fit to put in the plow. The breaking up of the crust on the surface lets in light and warmth, thus enabling the farmer to plow earlier than he otherwise could.

The timbered lands of the south are fast falling into the hands of wealthy syndicates of both native and foreign capitalists. About the middle of last month a Dutch syndicate of bankers in Amsterdam, Holland, acquired from the Land and Mortgage company (limited) nearly 900 square miles of heavy timbered lands in west Florida. This is the largest single transaction in Florida since the great Disston sale in 1881.

Gardening Under Difficulties.

The Chinese are a very industrious people and nothing is allowed to go to waste that can possibly be utilized. As the Empire of China is the largest on the globe, and contains nearly half of the entire number of the human race, the necessity of economy is very apparent. They not only cultivate the land, but all of the lakes, ponds and marshes are gardens in which aquatic plants, suitable for food are largely raised. Among these the water chestnut is pre-eminent, and is said to be of a very palatable and wholesome nature. In a narrative of Lord Macartney's Embassy to China, it is related that his lordship's attendants in passing through a part of that Empire, saw a man cultivating the side of of a precipice, and, on examination, they found he had a rope fastened around his waist, which was secured at the top of the mountain, and by which he let himself down to any part of the precipice where a a few yards of available ground gave him encouragement to plant his vegetables and corn. The whole of the cultivated spots, which were at some distance from each other, appeared to be not more than half an acre, and near the bottom of the precipice, on a hillock, he had a little hut, where he supported a wife and several children in this hazardous manner.—American Agriculturist.

Pertinent Suggestions for Farmers.

Help horses and cattle to shed their coats by frequent applications of the currycomb and brush. As the time approaches for cows to "come in" reduce their food, giving plenty of good, sound hay. Teach calves to feed from the pail from the first. Give ewes with lamb an abundance of food. Give swine a roam in the orchards. Provide poultry with dust baths and a variety of food. Wherever tent caterpillars are seen cut off the twigs and burn them. Remember that few crops pay better than hay. Devote to timber any space on the farm that cannot be profitably cultivated in crops.

An Interstate Law in a Nut Shell.

As to the general meaning and effect of the interstate law some queer solutions are occasionally made. A western editor in speaking of the discrimination in freight rates, said: "Anybody ought to know that it is the short haul that costs the most. Suppose I am sitting in a parlor car down in Maine writing a postal card to a friend in Oregon. Now, if I can get that card to the mail car, only seven car lengths ahead of me, the government will carry it three thousand miles for one cent; that is the long haul. But it costs me a quarter to get the porter to carry it to it to the postal car; that is the short haul. Then the porter loses it on the way or forgets all about it; that's the shrinkage. And then you have the whole transportation problem in a nut shell.

Emigration of Englishmen.

The New York Evening Post finds that emigration from the United Kingdom is still on the increase, 286,104 persons having sailed from the various ports in 1886 against only 219,848 in 1885. [illegible] per cent. of the whole number [illegible] Englishmen, and about 10 per cent. [illegible] were Scotch, so that the 61,411 [illegible] only about 20 per cent. [illegible] whole number, whereas thirty or [illegible] ago Ireland contributed [illegible] per cent. of all. The [illegible]

It is to be regretted that the Knights of Labor should waste their strength in [illegible] strikes [illegible] better than suicide [illegible] helping to paralyze trade. The mills at Hyde Park are running on four days per week. The Lapham Mill at Millbury is stopped. The Vassalboro' Mills, with their 23 sets of machinery, are stopping and others are preparing to follow suit. 5,000 of the New York strikers, are unemployed and are likely to be. 31,063 immigrants came into New York during the month of March; 1,111 came in on the last day of March. On March 30, 50 Frenchmen went to Portsmouth, N. H., and a larger number of Italians went from Boston to the same place, all hired to work on the railroad at low wages. Millions of dollars' worth of goods come in at an undervaluation, and a continual stream of machinery flows into this country from Europe, and yet, organized labor can see nothing to do but fight their employers, and continually impoverish themselves and paralyze trade by petty strikes. If the leaders cannot fine more profitable business for organized labor to perform, we are sorry for labor. All organization, whether of employers or employes, that attempts coercion, even in a mild form, will fail for the reason that all such acts are contrary to natural laws which are unchangeable. At best only temporary victories can be obtained, and they are not worth having. Should trade continue to grow worse, those who have been impoverished by strikes will be the most bitter against their leaders.—Wade's Fibre and Fabric.

Concerning Postal Cards.

C. C. Woolworth of Albany, the head of the Castleton, N. Y. concern that furnishes the government with postal cards, said to a reporter recently: "Heretofore the cards have been sent to Albany and there distributed through the railway postal service to such points as they were ordered. Recently it was determined to make supply depots at Chicago, St Louis and Atlanta. We have an order now for a train load of postal cards to be sent direct to Chicago. The weight of this load will be about 125 tons and the number about 45,000,000. We manufacture between two and three hundred tons the year around. The largest order we ever filled for one city was 4,000,000 cards or about twelve tons of paper. It was for New York city. New York uses about 6,000,000 cards a month. Chicago comes next with about 3,000,000 cards in the same period.

There are 450,000,000 postal cards manufactured annually. Two cents postage did not lessen the use of postal cards, but checked the growth of their use for some little time. The check has been overcome, and the public is using more and more postal cards every day.

Bill Nye, the Humorist.

Bill Nye, the western humorist, was in the city the other day. He is a tall, lank, smooth faced, bald-headed sinner who wears glasses and is as mild and pleasant as a shepherd dog. He began his career as a writer in Wyoming, where he was first heard of as the editor, proprietor and manager of a paper called The Boomerang. He had first tried his hand at mining, and in the course of his experience became possessed of a mule which he called Boomerang. When he dropped into journalism he honored his faithful, long-eared partner by conferring his name on the paper. At least that's what Bill says. By the way, his name is not Bill, but Edgar W. Nye, and he is one of the most domestic men in the country. He is particularly fond of his babies, and, like all humorists, is as full of pathos as a woman. But he can tell a dialect story as well as any man on this revolving footstool.—New York World.

A Trained Left Hand.

Many are the advantages missed through the non-cultivation of the left hand. Occasionally an artisan is seen who is equally able to handle tools with either hand. Such a one has a constant advantage over his fellows, not only in the avoidance of fatigue, but in doing nice work and overcoming with ease difficulties that present themselves to those skilled only with one hand.

The man who can use a hammer or a knife or perform any other feat with the left hand at the same time the right is busy will find frequent occasions to exercise his skill. Another important reason for training the left hand to act with as great ease and precision as possible is that if an injury occurs to the right hand the left can readily perform all the functions possible to one hand unaided. By training the left hand in youth, one would be spared, in such a case, from spending much valuable time in educating the muscles hardened by age and unaccustomed to obey the will.

☞To get relief from Indigestion, biliousness, constipation or torpid liver without disturbing the stomach or purging the bowels, take a few doses of Carter's Little Liver Pills, they will please you.

Oleomargarine.

Official statistics from Washington show that there are thirty-seven factories engaged in the manufacture of artificial butter now in operation in the United States. They are all located in the West. There are 3,537 retail dealers in the United States who paid special taxes as such in the months of November and December, 1886, and January and February 1887. The number of wholesale dealers 266. The quantity of oleomargarine manufactured and removed for consumption or sale at two cents per pound during the months of November and December, 1886, and January and February, 1887, was 12,645,740 pounds. The quantity exported from the United States during the same months was 153,707 pounds.

A Lovely Complexion.

"What a lovely complexion," we often hear persons say. "I wonder what she does for it?" In every case the purity and real loveliness of the complexion depends upon the blood. Those who have sallow, blotchy faces may make their skin smooth and healthy by taking enough of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" to drive out the humors lurking in the system.

A Warning to School Officials.

Boston City Official—Anything wrong with your money, miss?

School Marm—Yes, you gave me a counterfeit fifty cent piece when I got my salary yesterday.

Boston City Official—Ah, I see; you [illegible]

[illegible] governor $2,000; Nebraska $2,500; Delaware and Maine, $2,000; Oregon $1,500; Vermont also pays $1,000, and New Hampshire and Rhode Island pay $1,000. This latter sum was, down to last week, the salary of the governor of Michigan, a very poor return for the executive of 2,000,000 people, to be sure, and by virtue of a constitutional amendment the salary is increased to $5,000, as it should be. It is said the amendment created no opposition whatever, and we are glad of it on general principles.

CAUTION.

Always use caution in buying a cough remedy. Higgins' T. & C. Compound will cure you every time.

The Croton aqueduct extends from Croton river to One Hundred and Thirty-fifth st., 30.85 miles. As a tunnel conduit it is the longest in the world, although as a mere aqueduct, it is not as long as the old one, nor as long as several ancient or modern works of the same nature.

We think we can cure a bad case of backache quicker with one of Carter's Smart Weed and Belladonna Bachache Plasters, than by any other application, and after the backache is cured you can still wear the plaster without discomfort two or three weeks longer. This combination of Smart Weed and Belladonna is a great hit, and it is hard to find any pain or ache that will not yield to it. Price 25 cents. Sold by druggists everywhere.

It is estimated that it would cost $6,000,000,000 for the European nations to go into a general war. A good slice of that sum would in that event come to America.

That Tired Feeling.

Afflicts nearly every one in the spring. The system having become accustomed the bracing air of winter, is weakened by the warm days of the changing season, and readily yields to attacks of disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just the medicine needed. It tones and builds up every part of the body, and also expels all impurities of the blood. Try it this season.

Mrs. Grundy asserts in the New York Mail that the tailor-made woman has enough wires and steels on her person to get up an electric storm.

A perfectly sound body and a mind unimpaired are possible only with pure blood. Leading medical authorities indorse Ayer's Sarsaparilla as the best blood purifying medicine in existence It vastly increases the working and productive powers of both hand and brain.

We've seen them afar at high noontide,
When fiercely the world's hot flashes beat,
Yet never have bidden them turn aside,
And tarry awhile in converse sweet;
Nor prayed them to hallow the cheer we spread,
To drink of our wine and break of bread.

We promised our hearts, that when the stress
Of the life-work reaches the longed-for close—
When the weight that we groan with hinders less,
We'll loosen our thoughts to such repose
As banishes care's disturbing din,
And then—we'll call the angels in.

The day that we dreamed of comes at length,
When tired of every mocking quest,
And broken in spirit and shorn of strength,
We drop, indeed, at the door of rest,
And wait and watch as the day wanes on—
But the angels we meant to call are gone!

A Dead Give-Away.

He was a bridegroom newly made—a wedding tourist he;
His bride sat in the waiting-room, as sweet as sweet could be;
Yet one would think that he had been a husband half his life
As on the register he wrote: "J. Percy Newe and wife."
But he raised his shiny hat that showed no mark of age.
A shower of rice fell from within upon the open page,
"Enough!" the jeweled clerk exclaimed, and brushed away the rice,
"John, bridal chamber No. 4, (we charge him double price)."—Life.

[illegible]

[illegible] the state of Michigan:

TO THE VOTERS OF MICHIGAN.—So much is said about the revenue produced by the liquor tax, it is time to present some facts concerning it.

The liquor tax law was passed in 1875. Its passage was strongly advocated by the Detroit liquor league. In 1876 the Public Leader, of Detroit, organ of the liquor dealers, declared the liquor trade had secured its adoption.

It is in no sense a temperance measure or temperance law, and the only merits that can be claimed for it are its regulating features and the revenue it produces.

Does the law regulate? It says saloons must close at ten o'clock at night, but every one knows they do not. They are required to close on holidays, Sundays and election days, but they do not. In Detroit the saloon keepers impudently announce through the newspapers that they intend to close on next election day so as to work all day at the polls against the amendment; thus virtually admitting it is their habitual custom to violate the law on other election days. They are forbidden to sell to minors but boys of sixteen can readily obtain liquor, even on Sunday. The law then does not regulate.

The tax produces some revenue, but if it is of any value other taxes ought to be less than before. Has it decreased other taxation? Before 1876 liquor taxation was unknown in this state. In 1875 the state levied a tax of $521,232. In 1879 your state taxes had jumped to $1,153,096, and in 1885, after enjoying the "revenue" for ten years, your state taxes had increased to $1,655,261, three times as much as they were without it. The rum sellers boast they pay a million a year of your taxes, but what benefit when your state taxes are still a million dollars a year more than they were in 1875.

Why do taxes increase? Because every session of the legislature since the tax was adopted has had to provide a new state institution for the care of wrecks of the rum traffic. You have built a new institution for the wrecks of the rum traffic. You have built a new prison at Iona, a new insane asylum at Traverse City, a reform school at Adrian, an insane asylum at Ionia,—the fourth in the state—a new prison at Marquette—the third in the state; and the legislature is now considering a project for an asylum for idiots. Every taxpayer can judge for himself what portion of these expenses are caused by the liquor traffic. But what portion is paid by the liquor tax money? Not a cent. Not a dollar of the liquor tax money goes into the state treasury.

The effect of the liquor traffic on county taxes is worse than on state taxes. Every arrest made by a sheriff, constable or policeman, is paid by the county. All the expenses of criminal cases is borne by the county. And the poor become a county charge. How much of this expence is caused is caused by the liquor traffic? Judge for yourselves. But how much is paid by the liquor tax money? Not a cent. Not a dollar of the liquor tax money goes into the county fund.

The state law gives the liquor tax to the city or incorporated village in which the saloon is situated. If not in either then it goes to the township. The effect of the law has been to greatly increase the number of incorporated villages. There were in June 1884, forty-eight of these in the state with less than 500 inhabitants each, and some of them having little more than 100. Let a saloon locate on a cross road and straightway the neighbors draw an imaginary line about it and it becomes incorporated. All outsiders are thus fenced out from the benefits of the whiskey tax. The great farming community receives not a cent. But while the village gets the tax money the country pays its full share of the expenses caused by the liquor traffic, and the farmers probably pay two thirds of the county and state taxes.

According to the census of 1884, the population of the state was 1,858,000. Of these, 720,000 lived in cities and incorporated villages and these received that whole tax; but there are 1,138,000 people who are fenced out from this tax by corporation lines. Are these 1,138,000 satisfied with this sort of a law?

How does it operate? The law in effect is a bonus from the state to towns, but to secure the bonus is is necessary to have a saloon, and the more saloons the more bonus. This bonus, amounting to over a million dollars a year, is a steady drain on the farming community. Farmers, weary of being taxed to support cities, are leaving their farms and moving into town. That is the only way they can share the tax. From 1880 to 1884 the population of Michigan cities and incorporated villages increased 180,000, while the farming population only increased 37,000. The towns added 82½ per cent. to their population, while the rural districts added only 3 per cent. The state is paying a premium to municipalities to induce them to increase the number of saloons and the farmer [illegible]

One of Beecher's Letters.

A most interesting and charistic letter from Henry Ward Beecher was found in the archives of the Grand Army of the Republic. It was written in 1878 for the celebration of Memorial day services in New York. It was at the close of the first year of President Hayes' term, and the partisan feeling growing out of the electoral contest of 1877 was intense. Gen. N. P. Banks was the orator of the day Gen. Sherman had been persuaded to be present at the the parade and to make an address at the evening meeting. It was the occasion when the national guard first acted as an escort to the Grand Army of the Republic, and the ovations Gen. Sherman received along the whole line of parade were perhaps the most demonstrative and impressive ever seen in this city. The great theatre was crowded and Mr. Beecher was present and opened the ceremonies with a most impressive prayer. Subsequently it was decided to publish the proceedings in pamphlet form, and a letter was sent to Mr. Beecher requesting him to furnish the text of his exhortation. The following was his characteristic reply:

PEEKSKILL, July 11, 1878.—Gen. H. A. Barnum, Grand Marshall, etc: You request me to send you my prayer made on Decoration day evening. If you will send me the notes of the oriole that whistled from the tops of my trees last June: or the iridescent globes that came in by millions on the last waves that rolled in on the beach yesterday; or a segment of the rainbow last week; or the perfume of the first violet that blossomed last May, I will also send you the prayer that rose to my lips with the occasion and left me forever. I hope it went heavenward; in which case the only record of it will be found in heaven.

Very truly yours,
HENRY WARD BEECHER.

Setting a River on Fire.

A successful attempt to set the Hudson on fire seemed to have been made recently. Flames burst out about 200 yards from the shore off Sixty-third street, New York, and spread along the surface until the reached and set fire to the New York Central railroad freight piers, destroying one of the piers, a coal shed and two barges before they were extinguished, involving a total loss of $100,000. The origin of the fire was a novel one. A leak in the Standard oil company's pipe under the water allowed the oil to rise, and a spark from a passing tug ignited it, producing the strange phenomenon and the disastrous results describes.

Gentlemen—About three years ago my little grandchild (now nearly five years of age) was stricken with Eczema. CHAPTER XXI.

Granit Boyle, his face absolutely livid, comes straight into the center of the room. The glaring chandelier betrays the deadly pallor of his face, the cold gleam in his eyes. He has had sufficient time, during the troubled words that passed between his mother and Nadine, to understand that the game has been played out and lost. He might still deny, give oath on oath, put all to the touch, and defy actual discovery; but to what end? Who would believe him innocent among those with whom he cares to associate, even should the law absolve him? In the future the fate of the outcast, the leper, should be his. She would be the chief witness for the prosecution—she, with her soft voice, her pure eyes! What chance would he have against her, even though judge and jury acquit him? His world would believe in her. And it is this same voice that has betrayed him—the dearest voice on earth to him!

He goes slowly up to the girl who has ruined him and lays his hand upon her shoulder. For the moment it seems he has forgotten that there is any one in the world but her.

"You!—you here?" he says.

There is immeasurable surprise but no anger in his tone; his glance dwells upon her lingeringly, tenderly as ever. He is lost in one of the old dreams. It is his last.

"Tell them," entreats Nadine eagerly. "They have been imagining dreadful things. I told them you were returning to England soon, but I did not know it would be to-night. Paul, let them know at once—at once—how those stones came into your possession."

In her extreme anxiety, she lays her hand upon his arm. Duran makes a movement toward her, but Massareene, by a gesture, stops him.

"You still believe in me, then?" says Boyle, in a curious tone. "You have had faith all through? You have never understood?"

"I do not understand now," cries the girl nervously. "Oh what is this?" She shrinks from him and presses her hand against her heart. "Why do you not speak?" she cries again affrightedly. "One word will reassure me. Yet you are silent. How pale you are What horrible thing am I to learn? Lady Valworth has called you her son. Oh surely that is"—

"Madness on the part of Lady Valworth," interruts he, with a short laugh. "To disown me would have been her wiser plan."

"What is this you say?" cries Nadine, in a low voice, faint, horrified. "You do not deny that you are Grant Boyle?"

"No."

"You are not, then, Paul Annerley?"

"That's true."

Nadine staggers back from him, and presses her hands to her forehead as if in pain.

"And what of this, sir?" demands Sir Thomas, coming forward.

He has lost all his pompousness, his magisterial air has deserted him. He looks old, distressed, shocked. Every now and then he glances back to where his wife is sitting, with her arms thrown upon the table near her and her head lying humbled upon them. He has taken up the sapphire pendant, and holds it out to Granit Boyle upon a shaking palm.

"You—did you give this to Miss Roche?"

"Miss Roche has said so."

The tone is contemptuous; the glance that accompanies it rather more so.

"And—Lady Valworth's diamond cross that this young lady wore last night?"

Sir Thomas' voice is even more tremulous now. He would gladly have spared "my lady" (as he always fondly calls her) this; but it is better the truth should be at once known, if possible.

"I gave that also to Miss Roche."

There is a pause, startling because of the intensity of the silence that masks it. It is broken at last by Granit. He bursts into laughter—light, reckless, defiant.

"The game is up," he says. "Miss Roche has forged the first link of the chain of evidence against me; the rest should be easily made. I shall save you all trouble by giving you the exact facts gratis. I took the diamonds. I took also the sapphires. Ha! my pretty cousin!" turning his handsome head to where Millicent is standing, and laughing gayly. "As often as you acted with me in private theatricals, you little guessed how well I could sustain a part, even a difficult one, if I threw my whole will into it. I must apologize to you for that handkerchief, by the way. I could have wished it were a finer one; but an actor must be perfect even in the minor details, and a burglar should not be acquainted with cambric."

Here Massareene makes a dash forward, but is restrained by Duran.

"Let us hear him out," entreats the latter wisely.

"Don't waste your superfluous energy on me, Massareene," says Boyle, lightly. "I'm not good enough."

"Keep it And after all I am hardly a rival. My charming cousin cared for me as I cared for her. I had no intention whatsoever of depriving you of her."

"You are a damned scoundrel" says Massareene, flinging off Duran, and advancing to Boyle, his face white with rage.

"Beyond doubt" replies the other, with a shrug.

"Stand back, Gerald. Why should you bandy words with such as him?" says Miss Grey, in a cold, haughty tone. A step places her between the two men.

"So, sir!" she says, addressing Granit, "while holding openly to your engagement with me, and declaring it loudly to the world, you were carrying on an intrigue under a false name—of which this girl was to be the victim!"

"Far from it!" replies her cousin coolly. "You were to be the victim! I had no intention whatsoever of marrying you. I had—I have—every intention of marrying Miss Roche!"

Nadine starts violently.

Quick to see and judge, he notices her emotion, and turns to her.

"I have your promise," he goes on in a low tone full of meaning; then again lets his glance fall upon Sir Thomas.

"Well, how is it to be?" he asked recklessly. "On which count am I to be first arraigned? The diamonds? Is my mother to be the first to cast a stone? It is only just! [illegible]"

Lady Valworth lifts her head from her arms and looks at him. Those who see her face never afterward forget how it was then. The agony, the despair, the deadly cold of it, all burn themselves into [illegible]

"Oh, Granit! Granit! Granit!"

[illegible] cry rises and rings through the room. It is a cry from a [illegible]

[illegible] smile. "Already my passage is engaged. I leave England for a [illegible], never, I hope, to return to it. On the twenty-fourth Nadine and I sail for Canada."

Nadine recoils from him.

"You must be mad," she says. "Why do you now link your name with mine?"

"It is premature certainly. But on the twenty-third it will be linked with mine forever."

"Oh, no!"

"This little affair has affrighted you?" says Boyle, with a dark glance. "In a distant land, under different circumstances, you will readily forget it."

"Forget this night?"

"And all, and every one belonging to it."

"You hope too much."

"This hope is my life! It shall not be too much! You shrink now; your woman's heart fails you; but in the time to come there will be no room for regret. Joy shall fill your days. Come, take courage."

"Not for such cause as this."

"A truce to folly!" cries he, with a flash of passion. "I tell you you are mine, and shall follow me where I go. Have you forgotten your oath, your promise?"

"That promise was given to Paul Annerley," returns she firmly.

"That promise was given to me! To me—do you hear? whether my name be Granit Boyle, or Paul Annerley, or—the devil! Come!" Going nearer to her, he grasps her hand, "I cannot speak to you with all these gaping fools around; come to some other room."

He drags her toward the door, not brutally, but with determination. Duran, going quickly up, by a sudden sharp wrench delivers her from him. He would perhaps have done more, but that Nadine's agonized glance of entreaty restrains him. This glance fortunately Boyle fails to see.

"Who are you to dare to interfere?" he cries savagely, glancing at Duran.

"Keep back! This matter is between me and Miss Roche."

His gaze returns to Nadine, and again it rests upon her, his crime, his ruin, his coming exile!

"Nadine!" he says, and his voice has grown wonderfully soft.

"Think, my beloved! Would you cast me off now? now, when the world has cast me off? See! I would not plead to you, I would not throw myself so altogether on your mercy—even though that mercy means the saving of my soul—but that I know no other man is dearer to you than I. Your own lips have told me this. Your voice, as you gave me the blessed assurance, still rings in my ears!"

Duran, who has been standing near her, with his eyes upon the ground, lifts them slowly now and fixes them upon Nadine. He has grown very pale.

Nadine is standing with white lips and raised head, her glance riveted upon Boyle, as though fascinated.

"That I have not gained your entire heart I know," continues Granit, in the same low but impassioned tone. "But I am satisfied with the knowledge that no other has gained it. Come! what is there to wait for in this land? Your heart, if not quite mine, is still your own. If you follow me it is to gain a slave who will call your lightest wish a dear command. Come!"

Again he takes her hand. Softly this time—with gentlest care; and the girl, as though in a dream, suffers herself to be led toward the door. A step or two she goes, then stops confusedly, and raising one little pink palm presses it convulsively to her brow.

"You hesitate, my love! But why, why?" whispers he, still with his glowing eyes on hers, his grasp growing warmer. "Nay, consider! Would you send me out into the cold, the dark, forlorn, lost, without the one sweet thing I crave, whose presence will restore to me light and hope and joy? Oh! have pity, love! And remember, too, you are mine! Mine only! If I have sinned it was to gain means to make a home for you elsewhere. For you I have resigned fortune, home in my own country, honor—all! Now, when every man's hand is against me, you, at least, will not draw back?"

A shiver runs through Nadine; this lying speech, false in all but the wild love that speaks through it, stirs her frame and holds her against her will. All power of volition seems gone from her. She suffers her hand to be passively in his; like sobs her breath rushes from her breast. As though conquered by a superior power, she lets herself be led slowly but surely toward the door, beyond which lies captivity. She feels numbed, senseless. She would fain cry aloud; but some strange inward force strikes her dumb. Already the threshold is reached.

She pauses mechanically. The anguish in the eyes always fixed so immovably on Boyle's warns him it is best to humor her for the moment. That she is on the verge of fainting is apparent to him.

"For all this I will repay you with the service of a lifetime," he whispers eagerly. "My beloved, collect your strength. Trust to me wholly. And think—think always of the blessedness of the work before you! I will repent for your sake. I will lead from henceforth a godly life—for your sweet sake. Oh, Nadine! my very soul is yours to make or mar! Your promise to me! You shall think of that too! It gave you to me; it made you mine! Mine for all eternity! Come! Together we must be forever!"

Again he endeavors to draw her across the threshold.

"Never!"

The word rings out loud and clear and desperate. And then even clearer, and filled with a passionate entreaty:

"Maurice!" she cries, in a tone that thrills the hearts of all present.

Almost a Miracle.

Reuben Severance of Upper Stillwater, (Town of Old Town, Maine) has been perhaps one of the most talked about men in Bangor [illegible] The story of Mr. Severance's [illegible] his restoration to health and strength after he had been [illegible] by physicians to die and had himself given up all hope of life. The [illegible] stated to the proprietors of Brown's Sarsaparilla by Mr. Severance's son, who is a citizen of Bangor, and were published in the Daily Commercial. The publication immediately attracted widespread attention and interest but was generally regarded with incredulity as containing statements too marvelous for belief. Among those who took a deep interest in the case was Hon. D. F. Davis, Collector of the Port of Bangor, and ex-Governor of the State, who was an intimate friend of the late W. H. Brown, M. D., who had often spoken to him and to Chief Justice Peters, another of his particular friends, of the time he had devoted to bringing to its present perfection the great remedy which has immortalized his name. One summer evening a party, including Mr. Davis, and Mr. Warren, of the Brown's Sarsaparilla Company, drove out to the residence of Mr. Severance to learn from his own lips the story of his sickness and cure. In order to place the matter beyond dispute Mr. Severance's statement was put in writing and sworn to before Mr. Davis, who is a prominent lawyer and a justice of the peace. After describing the growth of the tumor and the other manifestations of impure blood and disordered circulation which grew with its growth, Mr. Severance says in his sworn statement:

I finally was obliged to abandon work entirely and took to my bed. I abandoned hope and prayed for death to relieve my sufferings. Physicians examined me and said that nothing could relieve me but the cutting out of the tumor, and the chances were that I would die under the operation. The risk they believed to be too great to justify it. At this time I commenced taking BROWN'S SARSAPARILLA as a kind of forlorn hope. I experienced an immediate change for the better, my appetite returned, food ceased to trouble me, the ringing noises left my head, and best of all the tumor began to shrivel up and disappear. It is now and has been for some time entirely gone. I feel 25 years younger than I did a year ago; my general health has never been better. I can and do work from morning to night and enjoy being able to do so. Only two or three days ago I worked in the hay field all day mowing heavy grass. I say God bless the man who invented this medicine. He should wear a crown. I mean always to keep a bottle of BROWN'S SARSAPARILLA by me while I live.
(Signed) REUBEN SEVERANCE.

Mrs. Severance also made the following sworn statement: The above statement made by my husband, Reuben Severance, regarding his sickness, cure and present condition is true in every particular.
MARY SEVERANCE.

The following statement was signed at the time by a number of prominent citizens of the town, including Frank Hamblen, the postmaster: We, the undersigned, citizens of Upper Stillwater, (Town of Old Town Me.) have known Reuben Severance several years; have known of his illness as above stated by him and know that he has been cured. We believe him to be entirely reliable in any statement which he may make on this or any other subject.

Tumors are only one, and perhaps the least common, of the symptoms by which impure blood, imperfect digestion and disordered circulation make their baneful influence manifest. Brown's Sarsaparilla has incontestibly proven itself to be the greatest remedy for these disorders which medical skill has ever devised.

His was a painful sickness and deprived him of sleep for much of the time, but he bore it with a great cheerfulness and fortitude until the time of his coveted release came. Life went peacefully out, with his family about his bedside. He was cared for through all the weary weeks by loving and untiring hands. The family have the heartfelt sympathy of all who know them. WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent].

WASHINGTON, April 22d, 1887.

Times are dull in Washington, not a breath of news stirring. The Lenten season having passed, Washington society, which is religious in form, has reverted with zest to gayety. The most prominent social event of the week was the performance of the play of "Jim the Penman" at the National Theatre for the benefit of the Actors fund.

It seems that President Cleveland and members of his Cabinet invited the Madison Square company from New York. They arrived by a special train, were accorded a special reception at the White House, and were shown many courtesies in their visits to the various Departments. President Cleveland occupied a box at the theatre with District Marshall and Mrs. Wilson, Col. and Mrs. Lamont. I had a seat directly opposite, and made it a point to observe, I might say diagnose him very closely, during the three hours of the performance.

Paragraphs have been going the rounds of the papers relative to Mr. Cleveland's impaired health. I have seen the President often during the past two years, but have never known him to look as well as he does now. His face has neither the haggard weariness of his earlier days in the White House, nor the redness of a later period, when its color was frequently compared to President Arthur's face. President Cleveland's complexion is clear, his eyes are bright, and his ensemble that of a man in good health and heart.

The audience at the theatre was a distinguished one. Secretary Baird sat in the front row. Near him was the British Minister. The Secretaries of War and of the Navy were there, and almost unmarked in the brilliant assemblage sat two others, who had been Secretaries of War and of the Navy in a former administration, Belknap and Robeson.

It is evident that the Administration is disposed to pursue a very conservative course with reference to the powers rested in the President by the Retaliation Bill. Secrerary Bayard remarked during the week that he felt that the people outside of Mass. had never realized its importance, or appreciated the gravity of the alternative left to the Administration ——a declaration of non-intercourse, and if it failed to effect a peaceable adjustment of the differences between the United States and Great Brittain respecting the construction of the treaty rights of our fishermen.

It is doubtful, he said, if the interests of San Francisco in maintaining her present source of coal supply from British Columbia, aside from the importance of the great Chicago business connections with Canada, and the vast trade that ebbs and flows across the 3,000 miles of our Northern boundary, do not exceed the interest of Mass. in the results of the application of such an alternative as commercial non-intercourse. The negotiations with England on this subject are progressing, and the Secretary hopes they will result in a harmonious and satisfactory understanding.

There is a probability of the Cabinet, or a part of it, taking a trip South soon. Efforts are being made to-day to organize a Cabinet party to go to Charleston, S. Carolina, to hear Secretary Lamar's oration at the unveiling of the Calhoun monument. Secretary Fairchild has expressed his determination to go and others are anxious to do so, while the orator of the occasion has extended a pressing invitation to all of his confreres to accompany him.

Some Washington newspaper men are in bad repute at the White House just now. At the President's reception in the East Room on Wednesday, while he was shaking hands with about three hundred people, mostly visitors in the city, who had come to the White House to see the President among the other sights, a group of these gentlemen took a position behind the Chief Executive and laughed and commented upon the people as they filed by in line. The comments were audible and the President [illegible]

[illegible] Grant [illegible] service. Lieutenant Danenhower was among the volunteers and he was appointed as navigating officer of the expedition, sailing in 1879 and passing with credit through the terrible hardships of that voyage and the loss of the Jeannette. Naval officers have conceded to Danenhower the credit of saving his party. Upon his return in 1882 with Melville as the only surviving officer, Lieutenant Danenhower was an acute sufferer from eye trouble, and the result of Artic privations, exposure, etc. When sufficiently recovered he was detailed to the naval academy at Annapolis as instructor and later as assistant commandant, in which position he has been very popular with the cadets.

Lieutenant Danenhower married Helen, daughter of Senator George B. Sloan of Oswego on March 13, 1884 and leaves two children. Mrs. Danenhower was visiting her parents at the time of the suicide and Lieutenant Danenhower was in Oswego about four weeks ago.

The following letter to Mr. Sloan explains as well as known the cause of the act:

U. S. NAVAL ACADEMY,
ANNAPOLIS, Md.,
April 20th, 1887.

Hon. George B. Sloan, Oswego, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR:—It is with the most profound regret that I have to inform you of the death of Lieutenant Denenhower. As stated in my telegram this morning, he shot and killed himself about 9:30 o'clock. Mr. Denenhower had gone to Norfolk in command of the "Constellation," sailing from here on the 11th inst. On the night of the 12th, on the way down the Bay he complained of trouble in his head. Upon his arrival at Norfolk he turned the command over to the officer who was sent to assist him. As his head continued to trouble him he obtained permission from the commandant of the Norfolk yard to return to Annapolis.

He arrived here yesterday morning and was looking badly. I advised him to see the doctor and if he was not better in two or three days I would not require him to go to Norfolk, but would send another officer to bring the ship back. He replied that he though he would be all right and would prefer to bring the ship back himself. During our conversation I saw that he was annoying himself unnecessarily over the fact that the ship grounded while going up the Elizabeth river. I assured him that I considered it only an accident which might come to any official under such circumstances and told him not to concern himself more about it. I learn to-day that a friend of his asked the doctor to prescribe for him last evening and he was given some simple medicine to quiet his nerves.

He arose this morning, dressed and had his breakfast. When the doctor called about 9:30 to see him, the servant told him that Mr. Danenhower was in his room. When the doctor entered he found Mr. Danenhower lying upon the floor dead, a pistol at his side which had evidently been used in producing the fatal wound. The ball had passed entirely through the head from the right temple to the region of the left ear. He had written a card and fastened it to his breast requesting that his brother should be informed by telegraph. Now, at 3 o'clock his brother Washington has arrived. I shall do everything possible to carry out his wishes. It is unnecessary that I should tell you that we all regret his untimely death. I had recently requested the Naval Department to permit him to remain here on duty another year. He was Secretary of the Naval Institute, for which he was admirably fitted, and was doing excellent work.

His bereaved wife has the heartfelt sympathy of the whole Academy. I am too near a stranger to her to do more than ask you to assure her of my personal sympathy, which is most sincere.

Yours Respectfully,
T. W. SAMPSON,
Commander U. S. Navy,
Superintendent.

The remains were brought to Oswego last Sunday morning accompanied by the parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Danenhower, his brothers, Messrs. Charles, William W., jr., and Washington Danenhower, Messrs. Robert and George B. Sloan, jr., brothers-in-law of the Lieutenant, and Harry Powers, who served as groomsman at Lieutenant Danenhower's marriage.

On arrival at Oswego the body was escorted to the residence of Hon. George B. Sloan. The funeral took place from Christ Episcopal church at 3:30 o'clock in the afternoon, where the usual service was read. The escort was composed of the Kingsford band composed of forty musicians and the Twenty-ninth and Thirty-eighth separate companies, National Guards. The church was crowded and the streets was blocked with people all along the line of march. The casket was draped with an American flag. The floral offerings were elegant, several pieces being sent by his brother officers. The burial was at Riverside cemetery. There was no volley firing at the grave.

Fire on Second Street.

An alarm of fire shortly after five o'clock yesterday afternoon brought out all of the Fire Department. The fire proved to be the house of Mr. Benjamin, formerly one of the proprietors of the Victoria paper mills and occupied by Jas Rafter on 2d st. near State. It probably caught from the chimney in the back chamber. All the companies responded promptly, the steamers being placed back of the stove works and getting water from the canal. No. 2 got the first stream on the fire, the hose of the Osgood company being attached to that of the Johnson company. The hose of Mutual, Johnson and Sharp companies were all attached to form the stream from No. 1. Two streams were thrown on the fire for about half an hour and prevented the fire from spreading. The house of F. Chubb adjoining was badly scorched. The Rafter house was burned to the ground. Most of the furniture was saved.

Goodjon's Boots and Shoes are all fresh and clean.

Twenty-seven trees are to be removed from the park and the work of doing this is now under way by A. J. Osborne. The work of making the contemplated improvements will be entered upon as soon as the trees are removed.

The Mayor deserves credit for his good work. Law breakers are coming to the very needful conclusion that Mr. Hewitt knows his business and is determined to be the Mayor and not the tool of politicians, concert saloons, dives, questionable resorts and unlicensed saloons are feeling the burden of his righteous indignation.

Certain classes of citizens are realizing that just now it is not safe to attempt the purchase of police protection. The Central office and the Mayor's office seems to be just now in very close intimacy. That means danger to somebody. When the Central office makes a raid, there is one thing very noticeable, that the precinct police are not generally concerned in it. Presumably the reason is that outside officers are more sure to do their duty, in which opinion many see much reason to concur.

Under the new law the Mayor now has the absolute control of all the departments of the municipal government and hence can be held directly responsible for its working. This was accomplished by giving him the appointment of the heads of departments without recourse to the Common Council for confirmation as formerly. Several very important offices will be vacated in the early part of May and the Mayor must fill them within ten days thereafter. The Mayor, having been a candidate of both wings of the Democratic party, has a rather difficult job in order to satisfy Bosses Croker and Power. The outlook seems to be just now towards opening the floodgates of political jobbery and allowing its beautiful effects to be concentrated upon the Fire Department which has till now been partially free from it. The Mayor may disregard all these gentlemen and appoint some outsider. That, however, is only one of the possibilities which does not come within the bounds of probability. Still we give Mr. Hewitt credit of doing something towards enforcement of law.

The course of a theatrical manager, like the traditional true love, never does run smooth and I fancy Mr. Henry E. Abbey, notwithstanding his Metropolitan opera house engagement has thus far paid the box office upwards of a hundred thousand, does not have an easy path to tread or a flowery bed of ease to lie upon. He has with his company Mme. Patti and Salchi. If the former receives an ovation, then the latter's nose is badly out of joint and vice versa. Salchi is one of the greatest, living contraltos. Her interpretation of Italian opera on one evening last week was one of the most magnificent pieces of vocalization ever witnessed in this city. The audience was sympathetic and rose en masse to show its appreciation. This did not suit the diva Patti, for on the next evening she did not sing with her accustomed vigor and sweetness. The management gave out that Patti was slightly "indisposed." The public—the operatic public—of course demand all the talent possible and Mr. Abbey is always inclined to attempt to satisfy its longing. So to that end, he obtains all the great singers. They never fail to get jealous of each other, and only the mighty dollar has any remedial feature. While speaking of this subject it may not be out of place to refer to the National Opera Co's. troubles. The saying goes that the moment one gets free of one of the hooks of law, another catches him. That's true of the National Opera Co. Manager Locke is in the depths of woe over attachments and judgments. Madame Funch-Madi began the lawsuits, and notwithstanding the many successes of this excellent company and its praiseworthy object, it is strongly probable it will fail.

I was speaking of this subject to a gentleman who is thoroughly informed of these things, and he said the Interstate Commerce Law was playing havoc with managers. Special rates were formerly possible. Now the regular rate is charged. More than one company has disbanded on the road on account of this. The only way now is to appear in a town near the state border and get the special rate while traveling in the state; pay the regular rate to a town near the border of said state and get the special rate while "barn storming through it."

The season here is drawing to a close. [illegible] to replace them by others. He has done this in part with the present pictures. In the rear of the room in which "Christ before Pilate" is exhibited is another in which are a goodly number of exquisite canvases by the best painters. These are shown to rich buyers and many a one has been quietly sold and removed therefrom. It seems to be the rule among the large private buyers of pictures to avoid notoriety. But circles will have plenty to occupy attention.

The American Association Prize Fund exhibition, The National Academy and the re-arrangement of and additions to the Museum, the Park are the attractions. The noticeable feature, I observe, is the new and vigorous work of some of our rising young artists. The hope is that fashion (for fashion obtains in Art) will turn towards our home talent instead of running after everything that's French.

Rev. Mr. Stone Retires.

Rev. Carl Stone, who has filled the pulpit of the Presbyterian church in this village so acceptably during the winter months, preached his farewell sermon last Sunday evening. There is a universal feeling of regret among the members of the church that Mr. Stone's health is not such as to warrant his accepting the position of regular pastor, a regret which is shared by those outside of the church who have been fortunate enough to become acquainted with this gentleman. Mr. Stone will remain in this village for a few weeks at least and then probably will go to his former home in Mexico for a time. All will unite with THE TIMES in the hope of a speedy and permanent improvement in his health.

In a large majority of places in town where liquor is sold, a dice box has been used, and "shaking for drinks" was a common poactice. The result is that the custom has been abandomed and the rattling of dice and the tunking of the box is no longer heard.

[illegible] the store was visited by an appreciative [illegible] ladies from all parts of the village and surrounding country kept the store filled to its utmost capacity. Right here we desire to say that no store in Oswego county is able to show a better if an equal line of dress goods, trimmings and wraps. Their elaborate display of jets were seen in in the centre on entering, passementeries, irridescent steel and angle ornaments. On the right was a very large and elegant line of jutes, raw silks, figured plushes and draperies in lace, scrimp and turcomon. On the left a beautiful display of handkerchiefs in silk and linen tastefully arranged, a fine line of kid gloves, dressed and undressed. In the north window were shown two beautifully decked figures, one in a handsome brown combination suit the other in white lace. In the south window was a fine line of parasols, India lawns &c. The window on Cayuga street presented a fine appearance being filled up with evening shades of albatross. Colored lights in the evening added much to this feature. The display of hamburgs in white and colors was very fine. Two features that received much commendation were the figures dressed in heliotrope albatross one with a beautiful black silk and jet wrap and another in an elegant black lace dress made over copper colored satin. On either side their very large stock was arranged in an inimitable manner, showing to excellent advantage there cashmeres, surrahs, francais &c., black dress goods in silk warp, drape de Alma, heuriettas, jersey cloth &c., a very nice line of jackets in kearsey cloth. A very fine line of hosiery, table spreads, towels, carpets, English veiling with the handsome festoon of lace over the desk were some of the additional features that went to make this one of of the largest and most complete stock of goods in this locality.

"Among the Breakers."

A large and appreciative audience assembled at the opera house last Monday evening to witness the entertainment given for the benefit of the Zion church Sunday school fund. The Oswego Falls brass band was present and in several selections showed that it was progressing finely. Rosie and Lillie Lambert in an instrumental duett and and Susie Graham in a piano solo did very nicely. Masters McCordy, Messenger, Sheridan, Giroux and Hornibrook pleased the audience with a song written for the occasion entitled "The Progress of Fulton." The able manner in which the drama was presented surprised and pleased all present. Fred Bennett, as keeper of the lighthouse, sustained his difficult part most excellently while Louis Emerick as "Scud" the colored servant, kept the house in a roar by his antics. Carrie Nichols showed considerable dramatic ability as "Mother Carey, the fortune teller. Blanche Boomer used the Irish dialect very skillfully and made an excellent Biddy Bean. Abbey Stephens as Miss Minnie Daze and Bessie Green as Bess Starbright, made a good impression by their self-possession on the stage and the naturalness in their parts. The remaining characters by Will Hoff, Harry Butler, Frank Coats and John Stevenson were well taken. About $75 was netted from the entertainment.

"Woodman, Spare that Tree."

Among the trees in the park that the committee from the village board and the improvement society decided to have cut down was the large hickory at the north-west corner, which is one of the land marks in that part of the village and which for half a century or more has withstood the wintry blasts. In summer clothed in verdure it has stood towering majestically above all its companions. While time has probably dealt with it as lightly as could have been expected, it is rather shaggy and rough hewn and a large mound at its base almost demands its removal for perfect grading. It looks however as though they would have to grade up to it as the ladies of that locality do not think favorably of its being cut down. We have heard it said that when women once say they want a thing so and so, it is "all day" with all other authority. In this case we hope that their wishes will be complied with and that the old hickory will throw a shade upon the earth for another quarter of a century. Mr. Edgerton, the landscape architect, who drew the plans, distinctly states that this tree should be preserved.

The failures of certain crops year after year, admonishes us not to put our trust too much in any single one. As a rule, a self-supporting farm is the most profitable one. An all round farmer has something to sell any time. Without surplus capital as an insurance against risks, few farmers will succeed as growers of one crop only. To be a successful specialist in agriculture you must be "one picked out of ten thousand."

The first planting of seed in spring should be very lightly. While the soil is cold from deep freezing or ice water during the winter, the sun warms it only a little below the surface. There is always moisture enough in early spring to bring seeds up, and once they are germinated the plants will give their roots all the needed covering by striking downward into the soil when this is better for their growth.

The advantages of the sliding door are so great for barns that they should entirely supersede the old fashion sort that swing on hinges. On the slide they are more secure from wrecking and wrenching by violent winds, are easily opened for any distance in any kind of weather. The supports cost a little more than hinges, but the extra expense is more than compensiated by greater durability, aside from the saving of material as a sliding door can be made very slight.

Our Neighbor is Successful as a Farmer.

Because he takes some good agricultural journal, reads it and tries to profit by its teachings.

Because he works according to some system, with common sense to vary it, if necessary.

Because he don't believe in overcropping his soil and constantly taking away without replacing. He gives as well as takes.

Because he keeps ahead of his work and drives it rather than let it drive him.

Because he plans ahead, and when his hired man arises in the morning he knows what is the first business of the day after breakfast, because he was informed the night before.

Because he keeps an accurate account with his crops and his stock, and knows what field or what cow pays, and which does not.

Because he watches the market and studies the demands of the same, and neither buys nor sells with eyes hoodwinked.

Because he purchases the best seed and is careful to get no other because it may be cheaper. And he doesn't wait until he wants to sow or plant before he purchases; everything is ready when wanted for use.

Because he takes good care of his team and stock and never allows them to be misused.

Because his farm tools are carefully housed when the season for their use is over, and are repainted and put in order for future use.

Because he saves all possible fertilizers made during the winter by his stock and does not let the spring rains wash the best part out into the road.

Because he doesn't sit around the "corner groceries" in winter and go to town every night in summer.

Because he is temperate, kind, economical, honest, industrious, wide awake, fore-sighted, contented and happy.—Our Country Home.

No. 2.—The American Agriculturist, (English or German), 1.50.

No. 3.—The A. A. New Poultry Book, for Everybody. 256 pages. 100 Illustrations. Most complete work ever published $1.00.

No. 4.—Engravings, "Homes of our Farmer Presidents." 11x18, issued during 1887 worth $1.00.

No. 5.—The same issued during 1886, forwarded post-paid, in a tube prepared for the purpose. Worth $1.00.

No. 6.—Articles describing the Engravings of the "Homes of our Farmer Presidents," written expressly for this purpose by James Parton, Donald G. Mitchell (Ik Marvel), printed on tinted paper.

No. 7.—A superb steel plate engraving of General Logan, executed by the eminent steel engravers of New York, H. B. Hall's Sons, from a photograph by Brady, and elegantly mounted on heavy highly-finished paper, suitable for framing or for the center-table, 12 by 16 inches in size. Price, 1.00.

No. 8.—A magnificent portrait of General Grant from his last sitting. Grand Cabinet size, 18x24 inches, and engraved at large expense, especially for the subscribers of the American Agriculturist, and supplied to no other persons. The chieftain is sitting in an easy-chair in his now famous Library. The expression on his countenance is exceedingly life-like, and the whole picture is grand and striking in appearance, far surpassing any previous likeness of General Grant. Its great merit is due to the fact that it is taken from General Grant's last sitting prior to his final prostration; that is to say, it presents him as a picture of health. Price, $1.00.

No. 9.—A magnificent engraving of Henry Ward Beecher, by the new process of engraving direct from the negative. When the great Preacher was prostrated with apoplexy, the publishers of the American Agriculturist, as they have so frequently done in other similar cases, immediately set about preparing for their readers the very best engraving of Mr. Beecher that could be obtained for money. They secured from Mr. Falk, the eminent portrait artist, the last sitting of Mr. Beecher, negative 14 by 17 inches (acknowledged by everybody here in New York to be far superior to any others), and immediately set to work, night and day, producing from this negative by a new process what we now confidently claim to the very best engraving extant of Henry Ward Beecher. It is executed by the new process of direct engraving from the negative, which thereby secures not only clearness and distinctness, but brings out all the lineaments of the human countenance as no other method of engraving can. The great orator and minister, as shown in this magnificent engraving, is the picture of perfect health, as he appeared after he returned from his recent long vacation, through Europe. The engraving is mounted on heavy paper, suitable for the center-table or for framing. Price to subscribers, $1.00.

All of these at this office for $2 00.

Lost and Found.

Daintiness of Sheep.

Very few animals are as dainty and choice about their food as the sheep, says the Stockman. At times they will leave a handful of feed in the trough when a close inspection may not discover anything wrong with the grain; but the sheep have found something in or about it not suitable to their taste, and so it is left. It is generally true that what one sheep refuses none of the flock can be induced to eat. A hog will eat anything and everything, but the sheep has conscientious scruples about cleanliness; and wants to know just what he is eating. We must humor this delicacy to a certain extent, seeing that no foreign substance is unnecessarily in their feed.

He was a clerk in a shoe store, but rather new to the business. When a pretty girl tripped in and asked for shoes he enquired politely:

"What number do you wear?"

"Why, two of course, she snapped; "how many feet do you suppose I have?"

"I—I—meant what size he stammered.

"Oh! size 3 and D— wide," she responded carelessly.

He fainted before a brother clerk could explain that the width of shoes was regulated alphabetically, and no profanity was intended.—Detroit Free Press.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has largely benefitted the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen, has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, and the German Syrup for Cough and Lung troubles, have perhaps the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted, in every town and village in civilized countries. Just to spoon and sigh.

Love, I know, completely fills
Life's void gallery;
Yet, while these dear moments haste,
Think now many dollars waste—
Coal and gas and other bills—
Father's salary!

Else must you the vacate the field.
Else must some one take your place—

Why Johnie was Cross.

Johnny's hair is just like silk,
Johnny's eyes are brown,
Johnny's skin is just like milk,
Johnny's lip hangs down.
Johnny in the corner stands,
Johnny bites his thumb;
Johny doubles up his hands—
Johnny's glum.

Johnny's looks are very black,
Johnny's blood is hot;
Johnny waves his breakfast back.
Johnny eat? Guess not!
Johnny's heart goes pit-a-pat,
Johnny's nurse is sad;
Johnny does not care for that—
Johnny's mad.

Johnny's only three years old—
Johnny's rather young!
Johnny showed to-day, I'm told
Johnny's little tongue.
Johnny cries (don't Johnny blame!—
Johnny's human quite);
Johnny's brand-new human sister came
Here last night.

Not Lost.

The look of sympathy; the gentle word,
Spoken so low that only angels heard:
The secret art of pure self-sacrifice,
Unseen by men, but marked by angels eyes;
These are not lost.

The silent tear, that falls at dead of night,
Over soiled robes, which once were pure and white;
The prayers that rise like incense from the soul,
Longing for Christ to make it clean and whole;
These are not lost

The happy dreams that gladdened all our youth,
When dreams had less of self and more of truth;
The child-like faith so tranquil and so sweet,
Which sat, like Mary, at the Master's feet;
These are not lost.

The kindly plans devised for others' good,
So seldom guessed, so little understood;
The quiet, steadfast love that strove to win
Some wanderer from the woeful ways of sin;
These are not lost.

Not lost, O Lord! for in that city bright
Our eyes shall see the past by clearer light,
And things long hidden from our gaze below
Thou wilt reveal, and we shall know
They are not lost.

Little Jim.

Our little Jim
Was such a limb
His mother scarce could manage him.
His eyes were blue
And looked you through,
And seemed to say,
"I'll have my way!"
His age was six,
His saucy tricks
But made you smile,
Though all the while
You said; "You limb,
You wicked Jim,
Be quiet do!"

Poor little Jim!
Our eyes are dim
When soft and low we speak to him.
No clatt'ring shoe
Goes running through
The silent room,
Now wrapped in gloom,
So still he lies,
With fast shut eyes,
No need to say,
Alas! to-day,
"You little limb,
You baby Jim,
Be quiet do!"

—George R. Sims.

A Conundrum.

"Conundrum! Guess it if you can
And tell me, John, the answer
Wherein a clumsy printer man
Is like an honest dancer?"
"I have it Jane!" "You haven't, though,
I'd make a dozen bets."
"One of them sets the forms, you know,
The other forms the sets."
"Sharp answer, dear, but not the one
Wrought by my mental caper—
One of them pays the piper, John,
The other pies the paper!"

Popular Divine. "My dear sir, it is impossible. I am called to another field and my duty as a Christian compels me to go, although it grieves me greatly to part from those with whom I have labored so long."

P. D. "Thirty-five hundred, eh? Well, come to think of it that call wasn't so very loud. I tell you what, if you will throw in a three months vacation, I believe duty will keep quiet for a year or so"—St. Paul Herald.

One of the Largest.

One of the largest men of modern times was Samuel Murfitt, who died in England a few weeks ago. He was six feet [illegible] inch high and weighed [illegible] pounds. The girth of his waist was nearly ten feet, and it took a [illegible] twenty inches long to encompass the calf of his leg. Old-fashioned [illegible] is again [illegible].

The backs of basques are gradually becoming much longer.

Lawns, percale and jean, almost as thick as pique are favorite cotton fabrics.

The cool, pretty muslins beloved of a past generation will be much worn this season.

Black silk stockings will be the fashionable choice for general wear this summer.

The newest black lace materials come made of stripes of velvet alternating with lace ribbons.

Belts of gilt galoon with dog collar and wristbands to match are worn with blouse waists.

Embroidered muslins in stripes of open patterns are much worn for skirts and corsages with ribbons run through the holes.

Blouse waists with belts all around, and basques with blouse fronts and girdles are favorite bodices for dresses of light fabrics.

A novel idea is that of using Scotch plaid under black silk lace skirts, catching up the drapery with black, red and yellow ribbons.

A new material is double grenadine now woven to represent a transparent fabric over silk, the two stuffs being held together by woven dots, almonds or large ball figures.

A Brand New Bridegroom.

The St. Paul Pioneer Press tells the following story of a brand-new bridegroom's wanderings in its city and the result thereof:

Not so very many days ago a couple, newly married, stopped at the Ryan for the night. They hailed from somewhere in the valley of the Red district, and had money enough to make a small ripple in the city. The bride retired early; but the groom, still feeling his oats, went out to see the town. He visited a number of the prominent resorts, and about midnight found himself in the hotel elevator. Calmly transfixing the hoist boy with his eye, he addressed him: "My boy-ish swhere's my bridesh? Swhere's my turtle dove?"

The boy, of course, could not answer him. But finding the number of his room he attempted to take him there.

"Noshir!" said the inebriate. "Ish—hic—wansh shmy cooing dove. She's the rosch of the valley, she is."

Everybody in the rooms along the hall was awake by this time, and several heads peeped over the transoms.

"She's—a—a—a—hic—lambsh," he continued, "a swan of the shea. Where'sh she? Thatsh what I want—hic—to know? Whosh stole my cuckoo from mesh?"

By this time they were at the door of his room. It suddenly opened, a hand and arm clothed in white was thrust out, and the unfortunate yanked in with a terrible jerk and this remark:

"Here's your rose of Sharon and lily of the valley, you blamed old fool. Go to bed."

A Journalist's Watch.

Colonel J. Armoy Knox, of the Texas Siftings is nothing if not original. His latest fad has been to carry an immense silver watch, the face of which measures six inches in diameter. This is secured in the pocket of his sealskin vest by a fine lady's chain. The howl of surprise which greets its appearance when the Colonel hauls it out to ascertain the time o'day amply repays him for the trouble of carrying it around. He says that he got it that size so as to be able to catch the train on his return from meetings of the Clover Club. The other night he was going home from the theatre when a seedy-looking party stopped him and inquired the time. The Colonel nonchalantly pulled out his watch: the seedy party stared, his eyes slowly bulging out with horror. "No," he muttered, "I don't want no dime. I've had enough already. When my eyes begin to magnify like that it is time for me to stop drinking," and he fled pursued by visions of snakes.—Journalist.

An Editorial Appeal.

Do you owe us anything? If you do will you kindly get up and hump yourselves, hustle around and send us, if not all you owe, at least a part. There is a limit to even an editor's endurance. It costs money to print a paper, ink costs money, the wear and tear away of the gray tissue of the brain is purchased. We can't do it; we have tried it. As we sit in our fr-zen office meditatively breaking icicles off the ink bottle we think about these things; we have to.—[illegible] Miner.

RETRIBUTION.

BY "THE DUCHESS."

CHAPTER XXII.

Duran is at her side in an instant. He has encircled her with his arms. Her head has fallen upon her breast. He looks at Boyle as though prepared to dispute him for her to the death; but there is no occasion for him to be on the defensive. When that cry, when the word "Maurice" has rushed from her lips, Granit, as though he had received a mortal wound, had loosed his hold of her, and now stands apart from them, staring vacantly at the half unconscious girl. This he had never suspected. That her heart was not his, he knew; that it was in the keeping of another bursts upon him now for the first time, without a moment's warning, and crushes out of him his last hope.

There is something terrible in the glance he has bent upon her. He has apparently given no thought to Duran, though in him he finds his rival; all his thoughts are centered on Nadine. As if she feels the terrible concentration of his regard, she shivers in Duran's arms, and slowly lifts her head. Her eyes meet Boyle's.

"So!" he says, and no more.

There is such a cruel meaning in the one word he has uttered that Nadine, freeing herself from Duran's restraining grasp, goes forward as if to refute in person whatsoever he may dare to insist upon. Yet, as she draws near to him, the extreme agony of his expression touches, and forbids her to say anything that may hurt or wound.

"Stand back!" says Boyle in a low tone. "Do not come near me. If you touch me I will not answer for myself. Probably I shall kill you."

"Paul!"

She has forgotten everything save the despair that she has brought to him, and that stands marked upon his pallid face.

"I warn you to keep away," repeats he in the same dull, methodical tone as before. "If you spoke forever you could not tell me more than I know now. It is too late to cajole or deceive me further. You must be satisfied with the old victory."

"If you would but listen"——

"To believe again—to be again undone? Be warned!" cries he with a sudden access of violent passion.

"If you approach me one step nearer, if your treacherous voice sounds once more upon my ear, I will dash your false brains against that wall opposite!" He draws his breath fiercely, and his hands work together in a convulsive frenzy. "Traitress!" he whispers, a cold fury in his tone; "how has it been between us? I gave you all—my love, my life, my hopes. You gave me a serpent's smile and glances false as hell! With desire in your heart for another, you held out a hand to me, and swore you knew not the meaning of the strange word love! Stand back, I tell you, if life is still of value to you. Nay, not a word! Treacherous devil that you are, I would still spare you!"

"If you would only let me tell you how"——

She has placed her hand appealingly upon his. With a sudden cry, wild as though coming from a beast hurt unto death, he seizes her, and flinging her far from him, sends her with a crash against the furthest wall.

She drops like a stone to the ground.

Duran, holding her to his heart, looks round. Boyle is no longer to be seen. Without waiting to learn the consequences of his fury, he had rushed from the room.

* * * * * *

"Well, at last my duty is at an end; my final guest has departed. I can now rest my weary limbs," says Miss Grey some hours later, sinking into a chair as she speaks.

"You look awfully done," returns Massareene with deep solicitude.

"I am tired. I confess it. With all this anxiety upon my mind, to be obliged to go about among the guests and apologize to them for poor Lady Valworth's absence, was more trying than I knew. Auntie was of no help at all. She was thoroughly upset herself, and for the first hour unpresentable. Then she rallied a little, but to hardly any purpose. Oh, Gerald! what a terrible evening this has been!"

"It has had its good side, however. You are free."

"Free—yes."

"To let me love you."

"I have had no time to think of that." She regards him earnestly for a moment. "You will compel me to believe you selfish," she says slowly.

"Is it selfish to consider above everything the welfare of the one best beloved? If so, I plead guilty. I tell you I have thought of nothing since—since Boyle's expose—but the fact that you have been delivered out of the hands of such a man."

"One must think of Nadine."

"How is she now?" "Well, but still terrified. His violence did her no bodily harm, but she is oppressed by nervous horror, and will not consent to remain alone for even a moment.

She is now in the morning room with Mr. Duran and auntie."

"You were surprised about Duran!"

"Weren't you? When she called out to him that time, and when he caught her in his arms, I could hardly believe my senses. Well, it is a good exchange for her. Maurice Duran is handsome, and rich, and —her heart's chosen. She is a lucky girl!"

"Are you unlucky?" He asks the question wistfully, looking down at her with his plain, kindly face rather disturbed. "I am ugly and poor, and not altogether sure that I am the chosen of her who is all the world to me."

"Oh! you are you?" returns she sententiously. "And as for Maurice Duran, I would not marry him, even if he had the grace to ask me."

"And you will marry me?" eagerly.

"Time will prove that."

She laughs at him a little saucily from under her long lashes, and holds out to him a hand with such dainty sweetness as brings him to her feet at once.

"My darling girl!"

"A darling girl, no doubt; but not yours yet, however."

"And why not, since you are free?"

"I was free all along, it seems!" [illegible]

"No, it would be useless," interposes she, quickly. "It is done it cannot be undone, and surely his mother has suffered enough. There must be no further disturbance."

"I can follow him, however."

"I tell you, you could never undo what is done. Let him go; he is not worth notice. I should be ashamed to confess that his sting hurt me. And we are bound to remember his mother."

"Ah! poor Lady Valworth! She indeed is the one to be pitied."

"So you would say, could you see her now."

"Where is she?"

"In her own room. Sir Thomas was with her. His grief for her was very touching, but she seemed, I thought, impatient under it. She looked old, crushed, broken!"

Millicent turns aside, but not before he can see that the hot tears are running down her cheeks.

"Poor woman!" says he softly. And then: "My darling, you are worn out. You have been thinking for every one. Let me now think for you. You want rest. Let me persuade you to lie down for a little while."

"It would be useless. I could not sleep. The very air is heavy with trouble. As long as that man remains in the house I hardly know how any of us can breathe."

"That difficulty will be conquered in a few hours. He will leave, of course, by the early train.

"I suppose so. His poor mother!"

"Millicent! Try to forget it all for awhile at least. Think of something else"—he pauses and looks at her entreatingly. "Could you not think of me?"

"If I hadn't you to think of I should go mad," returns she, with sudden soft vehemence. She holds out her hands to him. "You are my one comfort," she whispers brokenly.

They do not hear the door open, and indeed she is still in his arms when Mrs. Brand's voice falls on their ears.

"Is this what you call 'taking a little rest'?" she asks, with deep reproach. There is, however, no anger in her tones—he looks too sad, too depressed for any open demonstrations of annoyance.

"Mrs. Brand," says Massareene, advancing eagerly toward her, "you know how it is with me and Millicent. You must have known for a long time. Now that this unhappy affair has left her once again her own mistress, do not refuse to let me plead my cause."

Mrs. Brand has sunk into a chair.

"You are very persistent," she says, tapping her fingers upon the table near.

"Because I am very much in love."

"And Millicent?"

"I dare to hope that she—has found some room in her heart for me."

"Let her speak for herself," says Mrs. Brand, with a faint touch of impatience. "Well, Millicent, how is it with you?"

"I love him, auntie," says Miss Grey demurely. "I can't help that, can I? And—I wouldn't if I could! He is not rich, of course, but money isn't everything. I have been very dutiful up to this. That you must allow."

She says nothing of the secret passages between her and Massareene, and of the determination lately come to, to defy the world of relations for his sake. "Once you chose for me"——

She pauses. Mrs. Brand sighs.

"That choice was not altogether happy."

Still Mrs. Brand is silent.

"I think perhaps if I were to choose for myself this time, it would be better."

At this her aunt rouses herself.

"I had hoped to see you make a great alliance," she says mournfully. "You, with your fortune, and—and that unfortunate young man, with his prospect of an earldom. All is shattered now. Everything is at an end. But still there would be a brilliant future before you if"——

"I shall not give up Gerald," says Millicent, drawing back from her somewhat coldly. "You and Uncle Timothy can leave your money to whom you will; I shall certainly marry Gerald."

Massareene, coming forward, takes her hand and lifts it to his lips. There is a great warmth and gladness in the gaze he directs at Mrs. Brand.

Perhaps she gives it its value. So true, so unmercenary a love as this is not to be despised in the money worshiping world in which she moves.

"Of course, if you have quite made up your mind," she says with hesitation, looking at Millicent. There is something new and beautiful in the girl's face that attracts her. Love has transfigured it! After all it may be best for her darling to abjure ambition and cleave only to love. "You will be good to her, Gerald?" she says in a low voice.

Massareene, who is looking grave, regards her earnestly.

"I shall always love her," he says, "if that is what you mean!"

"You give your consent, auntie?" asks Millicent, kneeling on the carpet beside her and encompassing her with her arms.

"Yes. My meddling resulted in so dire a failure I dare not try it again. I am glad you have chosen a man who, if poor, is at least one who I believe will make you happy. One, too, whom I like and esteem. Ah! my dear to be able to respect your husband is a great matter. Gerald! see that she can always do that. And as for your uncle Timothy, darling, I think I shall be able to arrange him." She stoops forward and kisses Millicent fondly.

"And now where am I to go?" says the poor woman, in a melancholy tone. "I left the morning room because I felt sure that Duran wanted to come to an understanding with Nadine, and now you two lovers are wishing me—well, any where out of this."

"Nonsense! We shall never wish for your absence," cries Millicent tenderly. "Stay with us always, just as long as ever you like, dear mother mine!"

CHAPTER XXIII.

It is a very pale and fragile Nadine who is looking at Duran in the morning room.

"Now you are safe," says he, smiling. He presses her gently into a huge arm chair, and stirs into a glow the dying embers of the fire. A chill has fallen upon the night. As the warmth comes to her, as she realizes that here, perhaps, Granit will not seek her, as she sees the kindly face of Duran leaning over her, she feels a sense of joy and comfort steal through her being, and as a child, tired and weary, who sees its mother, might do, she stretches out her arms to Duran. In a moment she is lying on his breast.

"Oh, to be here!" she cries faintly. "To be here—in your arms—safe. You will never let me go, will you? You will not let him take me from you?"

"Never, while life is in me! But I do not like to see you so unnerved, my [illegible]. Calm that heart! Consider! In [illegible] a girl cannot be torn [illegible] by any chance [illegible] you could resist [illegible] [illegible] thoughts were those that remind us that by a most strange chance we have been given to each other just when hope seemed dead."

CHAPTER XXIV.

Joy there, misery here!

Lady Valworth pushes back the portiere, and with a slow and heavy tread advances to where the motionless figure is seated upon a chair, his head buried on the arms that are lying upon the table.

"Granit!" whispers she tremulously.

He starts to his feet with an oath, and turns a stormy face to hers.

"What, cannot I be left alone even now? What brings you here? Is there no rest—no peace?"

"It is only I, my dear—your mother!" Her voice breaks. "Oh, my child! my son! my darling! It is your mother, dear—your own mother! Did you think anything could make any difference to me?" The poor woman flings herself on the ground beside him and encircles him with her arms. "I knew you were alone," she goes on eagerly. "I would have come sooner, but I—I was not very well. The moment I could, however, I came to you. I could not bear to picture you sitting here all by yourself, and perhaps believing your poor mother was holding aloof."

"You had done better had you so held yourself."

"Oh, Granit! do not so speak to me! Do not repulse me!" She is still kneeling beside him, trying do draw his dark, sullen face to look at her; and now she takes his hand and holds it in fondling fashion against her bosom. He is once more her child, her boy, her little one; in trouble and disgrace—in direst grief—and to whom then should he come but to his mother? "My darling, why did you not trust me?" she says in a low, painful whisper. "I would have given them to you. I could have managed in some way. Yes—I would have given them."

"They were not yours to give"—this allusion to the stolen diamonds hardens his heart again, though not toward her—"they belonged to Sir Thomas. However"—breaking off savagely and dragging his hand roughly out of hers—"it is too late to discuss what is over and done. If you have come here to maunder about my crimes, I warn you I will have none of it."

"No, no, dear; not another word shall be said." Going closer to him she tries to press him into a chair. "Sit down now and let us talk of your plans," she whispers soothingly.

"Plans?" He glances at her vaguely, as though he hardly understands; plainly he has not been listening. Then suddenly his face flushes; the veins swell upon his temples. "Where is she?" he cries in a vehement tone.

"She? Millicent"

"Pshaw! No. She who betrayed me; that fair devil, Nadine."

"She is down stairs. She has been very ill," says the mother trembling.

"Did I hurt her? Did she feel? Did she suffer?" His tone is exultant, yet there is a fierce agony in it. "I hope so. Great heavens! how that girl lied to me, though her lips uttered no falsehood.

Newspapers in 1887.

Geo. P. Rowell & Co., of New York will issue on Monday, May 2d, the Nineteenth Annual edition of their standard publication the "American Newspaper Directory."

The new volume contains an exhaustive list of all Class Publications so admirably arranged that any one of the three thousand newspapers represented there can be readily referred to and all important facts concerning it, together with its circulation rating, easily obtained.

The Newspaper Directory will be used principally by Publishers, Advertisers and advertising agents, but the vast fund of information it contains makes it valuable to persons of almost every trade and profession? As a Gazetteer alone it is well worth the price charged, $5.00, for it fully describes every town in which a newspaper is issued, and few people care to know about a place where one is not.

The number of papers published in the United States, Territories (including Alaska and Canada is put at 15,420; an increase of 581 in one year.

The growth of newspapers in some of the Western States would be a matter of wonder, if it were not that this year is no exception to the rule. In Kansas the increase is 89 and in Nebraska 64; while the Keystone State shows a smaller advance of 35 and the Buckeye State of 30. Pennsylvania exhibits the largest increase in dailies, 17; Kansas in weeklies, 81, and New York in monthlies, 42. Seven States show a decrease: the most prominent instances being New Hampshire and Virgina, six each. The whole volume shows that great care has been taken to sustain its reputation as the most comprehensive work of its kind yet published, and to insure accuracy in every detail. Anything less than a complete compendium of American newspapers and periodicals would surprise those who are familiar with the efforts of this firm, who are so well known as the oldest, largest and best known of all the American Advertising Agencies.

A man's wife, should always be the same, especially to her husband, but if she is weak and nervous, and uses Carter's Iron Pills, she cannot be, for they make her "feel like a different person," at least so they all say, and their husbands say so too! Carter's Iron Pills equalize the circulations, remove nervousness and give strength and rest. Try them.

A Difference in Their Salaries.

On June 21 Queen Victoria will have drawn her salary for fifty years. That salary is £385,000 a year, and for fifty years it foots up the neat little sum of £19,250,000. During the same period of time the salaries of the presidents of the United States have aggregated only $1,625,000. From these figures it would appear that it pays better to be queen than presidents It should be remembered, however, that Queen Victoria has had a larger family to support than any of the presidents.

A Remarkable Case

Oct. 21st, 1886.

MESSRS. W. H. HOOKER & CO.

Gentlemen—About three years ago my little grandchild (now nearly five years of age) was stricken with Eczema. Beginning in a mild form he slowly but surely became worse until his life was despaired of. Six months ago he had scrofulus looking sores, characteristic of Eczema, completely covering his face and body, effecting his hands to such an extent that his finger nails came off. Such was his alarming condition that it left me little hope of his recovery. I, as a last extremity, resorted to all the remedies advertised as good for Eczema, not only that, have consulted many physicians, including nine weeks treatment at the Oswego Hospital. From this treatment, the very best to be secured in this vicinity, the child derived little or no benefit. I wish to state these facts in detail so you may fully understand (as I do) the remarkable success I have met with in using Dr Acker's Blood Elixir. Added to my own convictions the fact that physicians failed, giving up the case as incurable, I am only happy to assure you that the child owes its life to Dr. Acker's Blood Elixir. [illegible]

A WORD WITH YOU.

[illegible], Spring, 1887.

Preparatory to what follows we will say that realizing the great work of healing upon which we have entered, that nothing may be set down to quackery or ignorance, we have prepared a short history of the professional life of W. H. BROWN, M. D., from whose formula we have for years prepared the most successful medicine for purifying and enriching the blood, building the torpid liver, and strengthening weak kidneys,—in short, for the speedy, safe and permanent cure of all diseases of the stomach, liver, and kidneys, that has ever been known in New England. This history, together with statements from many prominent people whom you will know, of relief secured and cures effected from sufferings and torture by these diseases, will be mailed to you if you send us your address. Better that in this letter we tell you where relief can be found. We have come late to the work with BROWN'S SARSAPARILLA. Naturally we have taken hold of the cases which other remedies, altho' advertised with persistency and at marvelous expense, have failed to cure. The results have been wonderful. Nowhere have we failed to give relief, and in no case where persistent and faithful use according to directions has been made of Brown's Sarsparilla, has it failed to CURE any or all diseases of the blood, stomach, liver, and kidneys Mrs. Ephraim Cunningham of East Bangor, Maine, heard of it, read of it, tried it, and was cured of her weakness in kidneys and troubled liver. Carlton P. Williams of Amesbury, Mass., says he is entirely cured of what physicians diagnosticated as Bright's disease, and pronounced incurable. Eben Morrison of Cleveland, Ohio, advised by a friend to use Brown's Sarsaparilly for his kidney troubles, did so and was cured. Benj. Hill of New York Corner, at 68 years of age, gained strength and vitality for his blood, and health to continue his daily duties. Tumors dispursed for Reuben Severance and Aaron French by Brown's Sarsaparilla. Scrofula cured in Hartley B. Fisher, Corinna, Me. But why continue? Get our book on good health and read for yourself the astounding results secured by the use of Brown's Sarsaparilla, and remember these cases are those where eminent physicians have failed to find a remedy, and other medicines, advertise well and popularly introduced, have not benefitted, but Brown's Sarsaparilla, having been taken as a last resort, has proved efficacious and no other treatment was needed. Now with these facts in evidence, substantiated by reputable citizens accompanied by affidavits of prominent people, why not make this remedy the first, as it will then prove to you the only resort when you, your family or your neighbors are sufferng from any of the almost numberless disorders which arise from a deranged stomach, and inactive liver, or weakened kidneys? Now a word in regard to the preparation and combination of this wonderful remedy. Our Mr. Warren for many years enjoyed the confidence of the late W. H. Brown, M. D., and in the prosecution of his business of pharmacist hundreds of times has he been called upon to put up the prescription, which is now compounded for popular sale, and for a few years has been known to the public as Brown's Sarsaparilla. It is entirely vegetable in its combination; the most powerful alterative-tonic properties known to the materia medica being skillfully prepared on a scientific basis, and the result of a perfect medicine for the relief and cure of dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation, billiousness, loss of appetite, inflammation of kidneys and bladder, Bright's disease, dropsy, gravel, jaundice, heartburn, rheumatism, neuralgia, scrofula, erysipelas, salt rheum, diabetes; for the removal of impurities of the blood; to incite to proper activity the sluggish torpid liver; and to strengthen and relieve disorders of the stomach. It also acts like a charm as a remedy for all female complaints. Brown's Sarsaparilla has such curative powers and is of such immeasurable value to sufferers that we have decided to commence the publication of a series of extensive articles, detailing its properties uses and cures; and hereafter you can receive such information from the columns of this paper. You can obtain the medicine of any dealer. Yours truly,

NEWSPAPER LAWS.

Any person who takes the paper regularly from the post office, whether directed to his name or whether he is a subscriber or not—is responsible for the pay.

The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers and periodicals from the post-office for moving away and leaving them uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

JAS. R. FAIRGRIEVE - EDITOR

Oswego County.

DEMPSTER, April 19, 1887.

This place is a hamlet at New Haven Station, on the R. W. and O. Railroad, eleven miles east of Oswego. The post-office was named from the Dempster Grove camp meeting ground, a little over one-half mile south. In establishing the office the letter "p" was left out, consequently the name is called Demster. The country about here is remarkable for the raising of fruit especially strawberries. From 6,000 to 8,000 crates of this luscious fruit are shipped from this station annually. Over 1,200 crates at certain times have been sent off in one day. The place of destination is divided between New York and Philadelphia; a small portion, however, is shipped to Jefferson and St. Lawrence counties. Apples, pears, quinces and grapes likewise are extensively raised in this section, so that in time of shipping fruit New Haven is a very lively place, if at no other time.

SUMMER RESORTS.

There are two on old Ontario shore near this place, which are well patronized during July and August. Demster Beach is one and a quarter miles directly north of this place. Mr. David Wiggins has a three-story hotel fitted up for pleasure seekers, and all who call at this summer resort will find a pleasant host, and everything agreeable. Pleasant Point, situated about two miles northwest of the station, is a beautiful spot for any who may seek a cool and shady resort. Capt. Samuel Nichols has his hands full during the hot weather in taking care of the many guests who visit him.

WEATHER IN OSWEGO COUNTY.

The average temperature for the month of March, 1885, at 7 a. m., was 22½ degrees, being a little colder than the mean for the last 40 years. The mean of the first 10 days was 22.9 degrees; the next 10, 22.5; and the last 11, 23.3 degrees. The coldest time during the month was 8 degrees above zero, on the morning of the 5th. The highest point at 1 p. m. was 46 degrees on the 9th. Amount of snow, 4 inches. The months of March colder than the last were, 1856, '63 '69, '72, '75 and 85. The coldest in 40 years was in 1885, the mean at 7 p. m. being only 12.9 degrees. The warmest March during the same time was in 1871, the mean being as high as 34 degrees. The lowest indication of the thermometer for March during the same length of time was 18 degrees below zero. That occurred March 5, 1872 and March 13, 1885. The greatest amount of snow for the month, was 36 inches in 1856. In 1870 we had 32 inches, and in 1878 27 inches. The least snow in March, 2 inches in 1858, and 8 inches in 1859 and again in 1871. The coldest time last winter was in December, the thermometer making 17 degrees below zero on the 30th. Other cold days as follows: January 2d six degrees below; 3d, 10 degrees; 8th, 12 degrees; 18th, 5 degrees; 19th, 8 degrees; 27th, 2 degrees, February 5th 2 degrees, all below zero. Mercury has not fallen below zero since February 5th. Snow the past winter: November, 22 inches; December 19 inches; January 36 inches; February 9 inches, and March 4 inches.—F. W. S. in Lowville Journal.

The Loomis Family.

Among the papers on file at the county clerk's office is one entitled "Grove L. Collins and Grace Collins vs. Rhoda M. Loomis et. al." This action is for an accounting and for portion of the property of the Loomis family in the town of Palermo. This action brings to mind the history of the notorious Loomis family who have made their names almost historical in Oswego county. Rhoda M. Loomis is the mother of the well known Loomis brothers, who in their day were so celebrated for their horse transactions in various parts of the state. Mrs. Loomis is now 93 years of age and still lives on the old homestead with her daughter Cornelia. The family is scattered and but one of the brothers is certainly known to be living, while another can not be found—Oswego Times.

LITERARY.

SCRIBNER'S.

The frontispiece of Scribner's new magazine for May is a picture of the Govanni Bausan of the Italian navy, from an instantaneous photograph. "The Delevopment of the Steamship and Liverpool Exhibition of 1886" is an exhaustive article in the May number that is of absorbing interest to those interested in this subject, written by Commadore F. E. Chadwick, of the United States navy and illustrated profusely from drawings, diagrams and instantaneous photographs furnished by the author. Among other articles in this illustrious magazine are "The Tide" by Percival Lowell: "The Residuary Legatee" or the Posthomorous Jest of the late John Austin; the second installment of the unpublished letters of Thackery; "The Forests of North America" with many illustrations; "At Last" by Philip B. Marston; "Marse Archie's Fight" an illustrated story by Maria Blount; "An Irish Wild-Flower" by Sarah M. B. Piatt. "The Story of a New York House" is concluded with this number; Chapters XVIII–XX appear of "Seth's Brother' Wife." These with much other of an interesting and instructive nature go to make up the May number.

THE CENTURY.

The May Century opens with two profusely illustrated papers of Egyptology, the special subject being the Mummy of the Pharaoh of the Bible, which with other Egyptian kings was discovered in 1881, but not identified until June 1886. The articles are by Mr. Edward L. Wilson and Prof. John A. Payne and are interesting reading to all students of history and especially to students of the Bible. "The Chemistry of Foods and Nutrition" is written by Prof. Atwater of Wesleyan University who has probably given the matter more thought than any American student. The subject is invested with a domestic as well as a scientific interest. There are two articles of personal recolection, "A Glimpse of Washington Irving at Home" by Clarence Cook, and "Personal Recolections of Louis Blanc" by his friend Karl Blind. The Lincoln history by Messrs. Nicolay and Hay is exceedingly interesting this month. It is profuse with illustrations and portraits of a historical character. The paper on the war series is this month devoted to the battle of Chattanooga with illustrations of the engagements in this region. The other articles are of the usual high standard which has made the magazine renowned.

WIDE AWAKE.

The May Wide Awake opens with a brilliant frontispiece, "Springtime," by E. S Tucker, reminiscent of the open squares and parks where dainty little girls throng in all the freshness of new spring gowns and hats, merry with their jumping-ropes. The whole number is ensphered in spring light and air—what Mrs. Blake's "A Fancy in Triolets," Clinton Scollard's "A Daffodil," Mrs. Clara Doty Bates's "Wake-Robin," Mrs. Thomas Sergeant Perry's "Dandelions," Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney's "Bird Talk," Marian Douglas's "Arbutus," Mr. Barnes's "Spring Shower" and Miss Watson's very funny "A Successful Gardner." The engravings this month possess exceptional merit and the serials are very interesting. Wide Awake is a splendid publication for young folks. D. Lothrop & Co. Boston.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent].

WASHINGTON, April 29th, 1887.

Washington is dull, terribly dull just now, all the newspaper correspondents think. Second-Term gossip has about died out, and the complicating situations to which it gave rise have been worked for all they were worth. Spring is here with such accessories as sun-shades, buttonhole boquets, strawberry vendors, and the woman with the hand organ and the baby, but society is comparatively quiet. Weddings are still in vogue, but the gay world was pretty well exhausted with the winter's rout and does not revert to its occupation with its ante-Lenten zest.

But April's torpor in Washington will be more than compensated for by activity in May. Everybody is talking about the National Drill, and preparations are being carried forward as rapidly as possible. General Augur, who has been appointed commandant of the camp, is in appearance commanding, and the embodiment of soldierly qualities. He wears side whiskers and eye-glasses and is altogether a very fine looking officer. He lives with his family in an old fashioned brick house in Georgetown, and is on the retired list of the army, for which he remarked that he was glad, because he would have leisure to attend to his new duties, while if he were in active service he could not have accepted the position.

But the Drill is not the only event billed for May. Society always flocks to the Jockey Club races, and they will come off next week, then Forepaugh's is coming, Patti is coming, the National Association of Hotel Keepers is coming, there are to be reunions of one kind and another, and the unveiling of the Garfield statue, and the meeting of the Army of the Cumberland will also take place early in the month of flowers.

It looked last week, before President Cleveland's views and wishes concerning a second term had been reported, as if nothing on earth could prevent his renomination. Now that the manifestation of alleged coyness and indifference concerning that possibility is alleged of him, it looks as if his renomination could not be prevented by anything on the earth beneath or in the heavens above. Above all things the human heart desires the inaccessible, and if Mr. Cleveland should see fit to say definitely that he did not wish to be President for a second term, there would be a general clamor for him, coming even from those who are now his political enemies.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has been wrestling with the long and short haul across the continent. All transcontinental railways have applied for the suspension of the short-haul clause, and have put forth as good if not better reasons why it should be done than those that were given and proved sufficient in the case of the southern railways. It looks as if the Commission will have to serve all alike, although it is a court authorized to decide different ways for each railroad. It can suspend in one case and refuse to do so in a precisely similar one.

While our law-makers are away, conveniences and improvements at the Capitol which they voted money for are gradually being made. Two new elevators are to be put in place, one at the Senate end and one at the House end of the building. There will then be four elevators in the Capitol, one at each of the four corners, which will add greatly to the convenience of visitors as well as legislators. The contract for constructing the two new ones was yesterday awarded to a Chicago Company, at $6,345. The amount appropriated by Congress for the whole work was $27,030.

The landscape architect of the National Capitol recently made the grave mistake of setting out evergreen trees on the new marble terrace around the north and west fronts of the Capitol building. The Dome has been long criticised as being too large, or out of proportion to the rest of the structure, and and the terrace was planned and built for the purpose of increasing the apparent height of the building.

Of course these trees break the architectural continuity and destroy absurdly the very illusion of height which the terrace was intended to create. Instead of seeming the base of the Capitol facade the terrace looks like a wall around the Capitol, with trees planted on the lawn inside. The trees can be seen from a distance over the parapet of the terrace and the effect is that of an enclosed garden from every stand-point. [illegible]

Dr. Howe's Sudden Death.

A general feeling of sadness was manifest throughout our village on Tuesday morning at the announcement of the death of Dr. A. B. Howe, who died from injuries received last Friday morning while leading his cow from the barn. The animal struck him with her head inflicting serious internal injuries, which resulted in death as above stated. Dr. Howe has been a resident of Jordan for thirty-three years. He was formerly a practicing physician in Oswego county. After purchasing the drug stock and fixtures of Alonzo W. Case, he removed with his family to Jordan, and successfully carried on the drug business for twenty-five years, adding to it the book and paper business of Father Hough. For the past few years he has devoted his attention to his farm. Dr. Howe was a sympathizing friend, a good counselor, an exemplary citizen, a kind neighbor, practical, conservative and upright in all business, social and religious relations. His loss will be keenly felt by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance.—Jordan Times.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury,

as Mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucus surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do are ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury and is taken internally and acts directly upon the blood and mucus surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure that you get the genuine, it is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. ☞Sold by Druggists, price 75c per bottle.

Cheese Market.

[From the Utica Herald.]

UTICA, N. Y, May, 2.

Everybody was surprised at the amount of cheese disposed of here to-day, in one way or an other, the impression previous to market being that transactions would be about a thousand boxes more than last week instead of two thousand. The market was quite as active as last week, and there was a fair contest over a few of the best lots, but no one was disposed to pay as high prices. The feeling among buyers was that each could use a few lots at a somewhat lowre range, but when they got about so much they shut down and preferred to take the stock on commission. One third of the offerings were taken in this way, some of those who consigned last week, choosing of their own accord to do so again, their cheese having sold well. The make is gradually improving, both in quantity and quality.

Following are the days transactions: 2 lots, 75 boxes, at 11¼c; 24 lots, 1,372 boxes, at 11⅜c; 12 lots, 667 boxes, at 11½c; 2 lots, 85 boxes, at 12c; 30 lots white at 12¼c; 42 boxes white at 12½c; 80 boxes at p. t. Sales, 2,349 boxes; commissions, 1,283; total, 3,632 boxes. Ruling price 11⅜c. One year ago the transactions were 1,816 boxes, all consigned. Two years ago they were 3,891 boxes, of which only 759 were consigned, with a ruling of 10c. We heard no suggestions to-day about turning on the cows. Our full complement of buyers was represented, and they made things lively for each other.

The Greatest Blood Purifier ON EARTH.
[illegible]
BLUE PILLS
[illegible]

[illegible] and [illegible] by great [illegible] Nearly all Catholic clergy in the surrounding towns and cities were present. The event was one that will long be remembered. Probably over 3,000 people were within the church while the services were being held, while the streets were crowded with uniformed and regalied men and thousands of interested spectators.

Shortly before 10 the procession began moving from the college to the church. The procession was made up of the torch bearer wearing a golden cope; scores upon scores of priests in cassock and surplice; the two assisting consecrating bishops robed in rochets, stoles, copes and mitres, the last named of white; the bishop-elect, wearing the amice, alb, cincture and stole crossed upon his breast as a priest, and lastly, the archbishop in full pontifical robes.

The consecration services lasted until after 1 o'clock. The archbishop sat at the altar, arrayed in full pontifical robes. The assistant bishops were robed in rochets, stoles, copes and miters. The bishop-elect, arrayed in the amice, alb, cincture, stole and cope, with the biretum or small cap upon his head, was led to the archbishop by the assistant bishops. After saluting the consecrator they were seated at the other side of the choir, facing the the archbishop.

At the beginning of the ceremony the bishop-elect and his assistants rose with uncovered heads. The apostolic commission was read and Father Ludden made profession of faith and took the oath of duty and fidelity to the pope and to the church. He then answered questions, asked almost in the very words of the fourth council of Carthage, regarding his belief, promised to teach according to the doctrines of the Catholic church, and made other similar vows.

The archbishop then laid off his miter, turned to the altar, and began the mass, during which the bishop-elect received new vestment. The archbishop stated the duties and powers of the episcopacy in these words: "It is the duty of a bishop to judge, interpret, consecrate, ordain, baptize and confirm." After this all knelt while the litany of the saints was sung. Bishop Ludden during these prayers lay prostrate before the altar, in token of humility. This was perhaps the most striking and impressive portion of the ceremony. During these prayers the consecrator and his assistants pronounced prayers and benedictions thrice over the bishop-elect.

The ceremony of the imposition of hands followed and then came the anointment. The head of the bishop-elect was bound with a linen fillet, to prevent the oil, with which the corner of the head was anointed, from dropping to the floor. The consecrator on bended knees invoked the Holy Ghost with the usual canticle: "Veni Creator Spiritus," which was continued by the rest of the clergy and choir. The anointing is in tended to signify the interior reaction of the Holy Ghost, and is emblematic of the gifts of the Holy Spirit, with which the church is solicitous that the new bishop should be replenished. After the head, the hands also were anointed, the archbishop saying: "May these hands be anointed with oil and the chrism of sanctification; as Samuel anointed David, king and prophet, so may they be anointed and consecrated.

The sermon was delivered by Bishop O'Farrell of Trenton, and was a masterly effort. His text was Galatians IV, 14: "Ye received me as an angel of God, even as Jesus Christ." The Bishops present were; Most Rev. Bishop Michael Augustin Corrigan, New York; Most Rev. Bishop Edward Charles Fabre, Montreal; Right Rev. Bishops John Loughlin, Brooklyn; Frances McNierney, Albany; Michael J. O'Farrell, Trenton; Winandus M. Wigger, Newark; N. J. Conroy, Mew York; Stephen Vincent Ryan, Buffalo; Bernard McQuade, Rochester; Patrick T. O'Reilly, Springfield; Dennis M. Bradley, Manchester; William O'Hara, Scranton; Richard Gilmore, Cleveland; L. J. NoMahon, Hartford. The number of priests present exceeded one hundred. In the afternoon the priests of the Albany diocese, through a committee, presented Bishop Ludden with a purse of $2,565 as a token of their regard.

WHAT TRUE MERIT WILL DO.

The unprecedented sale of Boschee's German Syrup within a few years, has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of Coughs, Colds and the severest Lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by Physicians, as it does not dry up a Cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when the diseases make their appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price 75 cts., large bottles. 42eowy1

[illegible] store that [illegible] of strangers on coming to Fulton, both from its central location and its Metropolitan appearance, is that of H. & A. Rosenbloom, in the Church block on First street.

These enterprising merchants on the 17th day of April, 1877, rented a small part of the space which they now occupy in that building and stocked it with ready-made clothing, hats, caps, furnishing goods, boots and shoes. Two years later, owing to the increase in their clothing trade, they removed the partition which divided their original store, shipped the boots and shoes to their Mexico store and largely increased their stock of ready-made clothing, hats, caps and furnishing goods.

In the spring of 1882 their custom department was established, placing at the head of it the best men that could be found, they soon attained a large amount of custom work not only making suits for persons in this vicinity but for parties even in Syracuse and Oswego.

In 1885, when Mr. B. J. Dyer was about to retire from business, they took a ten years lease of both stores and in the spring having joined the two by cutting an arch through the partition, they stocked the newly acquired part with a full and excellent line of dry goods of every description. Owing to surplus stock in both departments, they are now fitting up the basement and by the middle of this month will open it to the public as a great bargain store, which will contain all their goods which are out of season together with trunks, satchels &c. &c.. The fact of their giving employment to 18 or 20 hands, occupying the whole of the main floor, the basement and a large part of the second floor shows the vast amount of business that the enterprising firm of H. & A. Rosenbloom are doing. The supply in both their mammoth clothing and dry goods departments was never as large as it is this spring and if it increases in the future as it has in the past, a new block will have to be built to accommodate them. These gentlemen are liberal advertisers and believe with good reasons that an unstinted use of printers ink is one of the essentials to success.

The Salmon River Water.

Before Major McCarthy's committee on cities last week, the Syracuse water question was again gone over Judge Huntington, Don. A. King and Editor L. R. Muzzy of the Democrat, all of Pulaski, were present with protestations against Syracuse's stealing, buying or having given to it Salmon river, for water purposes. The Salmon river scheme is to build a large reservoir covering over 800 acres. This is to be filled in springtime from the surplus flow of the stream, and to be drawn against the rest of the year. It is proposed to leave as much water in the river the year around as now flows in it. What the Pulaskians fear is that if the Syracuse people once get foothold with their waterworks, they will take all the water of the river and then want Oswego county to furnish more.—Albany Correspondence.

TAILOR WANTED.—An experienced coat maker at H. & A. Rosenbloom's.

[illegible] boycotted St. Louis patterns. The whole trouble, as we stated last week, is not from any dissatisfaction about wages but owing to the fact that no understanding has been reached between the executive board of the manufacturer's defense association and that of the iron moulders international union.

The trouble, according to information received by us originated in this way: At an annual meeting a year ago last January the selling price of stoves was increased 7½ per cent. At the last annual meeting another increase of 7½ per cent. was made making 15 per cent. increase in all. On February last the workmen in the stove works of Bridge & Beach, St. Louis asked for an increase of 15 per cent in their wages. The firm would not allow this but desired to compromise, offering 5 per cent. increase then and 5 per cent more on June 1st provided the market allowed it. The workmen would not agree to this and a strike resulted which has been kept up ever since.

The manufacturer's defense association, which had been organized for mutual protection, previously to this, took up the matter. The Bridge & Beach patterns were placed in the 3d and 4th districts which embraces a large number of the western and southern states and many strikes have resulted as the moulders refuse to use the boycotted patterns. On last week Tuesday, these patterns were thrown into the 2d dist., which includes Fulton. The moulders in the Stove Works quit work but received orders to return to work while arbitration was pending between the executive board of the Iron Moulders Union and the executive board of the Manufacturer's Defense Association. The Defense Association refused to treat with them. The union moulders throughout the country have been ordered not to touch the St. Louis patterns. This order affected thirty-five of the moulders in the stove works. They did not go to work yesterday morning. During the forenoon a committee of four moulders waited on Supt. Burdick but he refused to treat with them. This strike affects about 75 employes as, we understand, the works are closed and will remain so until some settlement or other arrangement is made by the company.

The walls and the ceiling unite in the forming of an arch, on the west end is the following "K. of L. 7040." On either side, it is decorated by symbols of the order and representations of implements used in the moulders', factorymen's, iron workers' and builders' trades. The ceiling shows fine workmanship. The hall is lighted by nine incandescent and one large arc lights of the Thomson-Houston system. A carpet is to be put on the floor and four hundred chairs placed in the hall.

[illegible] mills [illegible] of goods to [illegible] owing to poor work. On Thursday afternoon these weavers waited upon Assistant Superintendent [illegible] and asked for day wages or that the price per yard be increased on that particular class of goods. Mr. [illegible] requested that they return to their work until Saturday noon when a definite answer would be given them. This was not satisfactory to the weavers and they left the mill. There are fifty-six weavers on these looms and of this number but three remained at their work. Superintendent Maertens arrived from Providence Monday morning. On Monday afternoon a committee of weavers went to see him but he refused to negotiate with them while they were not at work.

A notice was posted on the office building to the following effect: All that have left their work and do not return Tuesday morning, May 3, will be considered as having left the employment of the company and settlement will be made with them at the office. On Tuesday morning they did not return and in the afternoon nearly all called at the office and settled.

A representative of THE TIMES called on Mr. Maertens yesterday afternoon. He stated that he knew the work was very poor but wanted them to stick to it and see what could be done with it. That if they had kept to their work he would have given them a satisfactory price for every yard of cloth they had woven in two or three months. That he wanted them to have confidence in the management. That the company was not making any money on that class of goods but of course that was no reason why the employes should not receive satisfactory wages. That he would not treat with outsiders but would liked to have had them return to their work. It will therefore be seen that the whole trouble results from the following: The weavers refused to work until they knew what terms they were to work on and the employers refused to treat with them until they returned to their work. It is unfortunate that it has occurred and hoped that the matter will end where it is. While the Knights of Labor have had nothing to do with the strike thus far, it is a matter of conjecture whether they will or not as a large number of these weavers are members of the order.

Mr. Barry, a member of the executive board of the K. of L. is in town to-day but we were unable to obtain any information from him this morning.

Rheumatism

It is an established fact that Hood's Sarsaparilla has proven an invaluable remedy in many severe cases of rheumatism, effecting remarkable cures by its powerful action in correcting the acidity of the blood, which is the cause of the disease, and purifying and enriching the vital fluid.

It is certainly fair to assume that what Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for others it will do for you. Therefore, if you suffer the pains and aches of rheumatism, give this potent remedy a fair trial.

A Positive Cure.

"I was troubled very much with rheumatism in my hips, ankles, and wrists. I could hardly walk, and was confined to my bed a good deal of the time. Being recommended to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, I took four bottles and am perfectly well. I cheerfully recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla as one of the best blood purifiers in the world." W. F. WOOD, Bloomington, Ill.

I have been afflicted with rheumatism. Before 1883 I found no relief, but grew worse. I then began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it did me more good than all the other medicine I ever had." H. T. BALCOM, Shirley, Mass.

A saving of labor may be made in the garden by using the rake frequently. Very young weeds may be easily destroyed by passing the rake between the rows, while by allowing the weeds to remain until well rooted, the hoe may be necessary. Economy of labor is in keeping weeds and grass down as soon as their seeds germinate, which renders the task easier.

All crops do best when the ground has been deeply plowed and then well worked with the pulverizer and harrow until the soil is as fine as that intended for a garden. No clods or lumps should be allowed on any field. One or two harrowings will not always suffice, but the soil should be harrowed in every direction and until thoroughly fine. The labor so bestowed will be repaid in the crop grown upon the field.

Mr. Isaac Hammond, a leading farmer of Wyoming county, N. Y., says that he can keep more sheep through the summer in an apple orchard than he can in the same acreage without trees. The orchard and sheep are mutually benefitted, the fallen fruit feeding the sheep, and the latter not only cleaning the fruit of worms, but greatly improve it by manuring the trees.

The Wichita Eagle Screeches.

Wichita, Kan., is enjoying one of those booms which come to none but western towns. Naturally enough its newspapers cannot repress a whoop of exultation over the development. Only the other day the Eagle of that town let out a scream which could have been heard to the Rocky mountains. "Now what has Topeka and Lawrence got to say with their measly little state university and female academy? Wichita has got the enterprise and has got the business, and she is going to have the education or bust a flue. Let them two antiquated villages in the Kaw river bottoms hold their peace. Wichita, with nine colleges, her sorghum sugar factory and her seventy-six wide open drug stores, is the metropolis of Kansas, and there isn't no getting around it."

A. R. Mandeville & Co., druggists, of Rochester, N. Y., says: "We have sold a large amount of Van Wert's Golden Balm for Catarrh, and every one using it speaks highly of its curative powers. We never hesitate to rcommend it."

A Fish Story Told Four Times.

Lie First. "Went 'down east' last week, and fished through the ice for pickerel, bass, trout, &c. Had heard that the March fishing was good. Caught in five days 19 bass, 7 pickerel and 4 trout."

Lie Second (a week later). "Went fishing with a friend on Lake Maranocook last week, and had great luck. We put in 28 holes, and caught 34 bass, 14 pickerel, and eight trout."

Lie Third. "Fishing through the ice with flags is great fun. Tried it in March. We had a great time, but only caught 48 bass, 28 pickerel, and 16 trout."

Lie Fourth "You can't tell me any thing about fishing. I went down to Maine last March, and with a friend put two holes through the ice, and in two hours and a half we had caught 96 bass, 58 pickerel, and 39 trout."

Epitome "We would have caught many more fish, but as my friend received a dispatch from Boston that his mother-in-law was dead we hurried home at once."

P. S. He really caught 2 perch, a flat fish, and a bad cold in the head.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal

Excitement in Texas.

[illegible] has been caused in [illegible] of Paris, Tex., by the [illegible] recovery of Mr. J. E. Corley, [illegible] so helpless he could not turn [illegible]

[illegible] presents very little dross with his gold.

1. Plan before you execute; have a good reason for doing everything you do. Keep your eye open, a note book and pencil in your pocket, jot down new ideas, and what needs attention. Eat meals slowly and merrily; sleep eight hours, you will accomplish more and last longer.

2. In the compost heap there is wealth. Keep it out of sun and rain. Don't let it destroy itself. Dry bedding absorbes and saves the valuable urine. Let none escape. Don't poison the air your animals breathe by composting manure in a cellar beneath them.

3. Good food makes rich manure, rich manure rich soil and rich soil well tilled yields large and profitable crops.

4. Underdrain wet land to dry it. Loosen the subsoil of heavy land to warm it. Stir the surface of light land constantly to keep it moist.

5. Don't let weeds rob your land of its wealth. Increase your help or decrease your acres rather than let one go to seed.

6. Select seeds early and carefully. Dry thoroughly and keep in a dry place. Plant only the very best; the plants will be stronger and the yield greater every year, and you won't complain that wheat turns to chess or oats to grass.

7. Be careful with your horses. Never abuse nor overwork them. Provide clean food, pure water and dry bedding, changed often. Feed liberally when at work, lightly when at rest. Keep their feet shapely, their bodies clean, and have blankets for cold weather.

8. Breed from large and strong mares. See that the sire is absolutely sound in wind and limb and comes from first-class stock. Raise colts worth $200 when four years old while you are about it. Don't raise $50 scrubs. Work brood mares lightly.

9. Watch the markets. Know the value of everything you have to sell. When a good offer is made, close the bargain with a snap. Don't haggle.

10. Keep harness soft and pliable with oil and make it fit the horse. The collar is the most important. It should be light, smooth, firm, yielding slightly to heavy pressure. Make it fit the horse like a glove. Keep it clean. Discard blinders. A horse needs his head when drawing a load as a man needs his arms in walking, therefore don't use a tight check-rein.

11. Provide good grass and clover pasture for milch cows in summer, with plenty of pure water, dark stable for midday in fly time, and a warm, well bedded stable for winter. Chopped mangels, beets and carrots, mixed with bran, with good bright hay, are best to keep up a steady flow of rich milk. Next best are sheaf oats, corn and good hay.

12. Keep cattle fat from the calf to the day they are sold. Warm sheds in winter, cool shade in summer, pure water, a generous supply of good and varied food are the essentials. The result, a good profit and lots of rich manure.

13. A few well-bred sheep and some light hurdle fence will enable you to turn to good account many a bit of good pasturage that would otherwise be wasted.

14. Keep no more hogs than you can properly manage. Shell and soak hard corn in water twenty-four hours before feeding; some hogs have defective teeth. Warm quarters in winter, with abundant dry bedding, are equal to one-third of the food. A good pasture of clover plenty of pure, cool water, and a dark shed with dry plank floor insure health, comfort and rapid growth in summer.

15. Aim to feed so that your hogs at nine months will weigh as many pounds as they are days old. Use well-bred, vigorous boars, and strong quiet, healthy full-grown sows, and your pigs will invariably be strong, vigorous and easily fattened. Have them farrowed in March and sell in December. There is profit in such hog raising.

16. Poultry warmly housed (not crowded) and well-fed with corn, chopped cabbage, boiled potatoes, oats and scraps of meat in winter, will thrice repay the extra care in high-priced eggs. Don't forget plenty of pure water, gravel and old plaster or lime. Twenty-five hens well cared for will yield double the profit of 100 neglected. Keep none over two years, except extra good chicken-raisers.

17. Keep axles of wheeled implements well oiled. A dollar expended in painting the wood-work with crude petroleum or red led and oil will save ten. When tires shrink loose, suspend the wheel in a shallow trough of boiling hot linseed oil, turn slowly and soak thoroughly, and they will remain tight for years. When not in use keep all implements under cover, and oil plowshares with clarified oil to prevent rust.

18. Grow the best fruits and vegetables, and lots of them for your own use. Once get your hand in and you will like the task. They are highly conducive of health, and good health is better than great wealth.

19. Don't forget the flowers. Help your wife to make home a "sweet home"—one that your children will love as long as they live, and see that she has help in the house when needed. Take her to church Sundays, and don't feign sleep when the contribution box is passed.

20. Win and keep the confidence of your children. Educate them liberally and practically. A sound, well-trained mind, skillful hands and well developed body are worth more to them than lands or money.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has largely benefitted the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen, has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, and the German Syrup for Cough and Lung troubles, have perhaps the largest sale of any medicines in the world. Oh, [illegible] so often done,
[illegible] be done anew,
[illegible] come with every sun
[illegible] morning the long years through,
We [illegible] beneath their petty sway,
The [illegible] call of every day.

The restless sense of wasted power,
The tiresome round of little things,
Are hard to bear as hour by hour,
Its tedious iteration brings;
Who shall evade or who delay,
The small demands of every day.

The boulder in the torrent's course
By tide and tempest lashed in vain.
Obeys the wave whirled pebble's force
And yields its substance grain by grain:
So crumble strongest lives away
Beneath the wear of every day.

The steady strain that never stops
Is mightier than the fiercest shock;
The constant fall of water drops
Will grove the adamantine rock;
We feel our noblest powers decay,
In feeble wars with every day.

And even saints of holy fame
Whose soul by faith have overcome,
Who wore amid the cruel flame
The molten crown of martyrdom,
Bore not without complaints alway
The petty cares of every day.

We rise to meet a heavy blow,
Our souls a sudden bravery fills,
But we endure not always so
The drop by drop of little ills,
We still deplore and still obey
The hard behests of every day.

Oh more than martyrs aureole,
And more than heroes heart of fire,
We need the humble strength of soul
Which daily toil and ills require,
Sweet patience grant us if you may
An added grace for every day.

For cash is not so plenty,
And wants not few, you know.

But I must have The Times,
Cost what it may to me;
I'd rather dock my sugar
And do without my tea.

My friend, look here! you know how weak and nervous your wife is, and you know that Carter's Iron Pills will relieve her, now why not be fair about it and buy her a box?

THE PROPER THING.

Fine gold necklaces are again popular for evening wear.

Coat sleeves are made easy and loose for all materials.

Beaded sunshades are a feature in the novelties shown this year.

Black repped silk dresses with lace and jet trimmings will be largely worn.

Leather jackets are now being made in rather jaunty shapes to fit the figure.

Two kinds of silk are used in making dresses, and plain and the other figured.

Silks are now restored to the favor in which they were held before wool fabrics rivaled them.

Colored brussels net still takes the place of white rouching for the neck and sleeves of dressy costumes.

Lace parasols over a fulled cover over a satin in color are among the prettiest of all the new fashions.

Composite lawn is a new English summer material, in broken checks with contrasting colors introduced.

Surahs with a pin-head dot in white are quite new this season. They are of American manifacture and very wide.

Apron draperies are the most popular this season, and have their fullness in lengthwise folds rather than crosswise wrinkles.

Broad box plaits are much in vogue on tailor made dresses. They sometimes are joined by an interlacing cord that goes almost to the foot of the skirt.

The long dress improver has almost entirely gone out. One, or at most two steels are placed high in the skirt and the effect is much more graceful.

A novelty in bonnets is of tortoise shell, wonderfully cut, fitting closely to the head, and trimmed round the brim with brown velvet, lightly relieved with pink.

Three breadths of silk are again used for the entire back of the skirt, drapery and lower skirt being thus combined. These breadths are cut half a yard longer than the foundation skirt and the greatest latitude is allowed in arranging the drapery at the top.

All Caused by a Small Dog.

There was some fun for a minute yesterday afternoon in front of the Albermarie. A young lady, a long chain and a pug dog came along. A small black-and-tan dog rushed out of the hotel, and in a jiffy had given the pug a sharp nip on a hind quarter. The pug gave a ki-yi and ran around the legs of a fat man who happened to be passing by. The fat man got entangled in the chain, and in trying to raise his left foot to clear it lost his balance and went headlong toward the gutter. The pug howled louder than ever as his fair owner shouted "You brute!" at the fat man whose umbrella in the stumble had struck her on the cheek. Several gentlemen who were coming down Broadway came upon the scene just as the man was rising. They thought he had struck at the lady and one of them wanted to take him by the collar. She, however, picked up the pug and hurried across the street in the direction of Madison Square. The fat man did not [illegible]

AN UNHAPPY BABY WIFE.

Forced to Live with her Husband or Go to Jail.

The case of Rukmibhai, the native lady whose wrongs aroused so general a feeling of interest in England and India, is probably fresh in the memory of your readers, but as the case now appears to be on the point of reaching a crisis it may be well to recapitulate the facts briefly. Rukmibhai was married, according to Hindu usage, at the age of eleven, to a youth some years her senior. She remained at her parents' house, was carefully educated and grew up, according to all accounts, into a refined and highly-educated young lady. Some eighteen months ago she published in the Times of India, under the nom de plume of "A Hindu Lady," a series of forcible and striking letters on the miseries entailed on her sex in India by the barbarous customs of infant marriage and enforced widowhood. Last year her husband tried to get her to live with him, and on her refusing instituted a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights in the Bombay high court. The case was tried in the first instance by Justice Pinney, when, it having been proved that her husband was too poor to support her, was utterly ignorant and uneducated—in fact, a mere coolie—and was, moreover, consumptive, the judge expressed the opinion that it would be a barbarous, cruel and revolting thing to compel her to live with such a man. He further held that such a case could not lie under Hindu law, and dismissed it.

The husband appealed and the case was argued before the chief justice and Justice Bayley. These learned judges, while expressing entire sympathy with Rukmibhai, felt compelled to rule that Justice Pinney was wrong in law, and remanded the case to the lower court for trial on its merits. It has now been heard before Justice Farran. Rukmibhai's counsel could only repeat that his client had never consented to the marriage and never regarded the man as her husband; that the husband was poor, ignorant and unhealthy, and that if ordered to return to him she would be forced to disobey, and was prepared to take the consequences. The court had no option save to pass an order that she should join her husband within a month. Should she fail to do so she would be liable to six months' imprisonment. The case has excited much sympathy among the Anglo-Indian community. The English newspapers are publishing articles and letters on the subject and steps are being taken in Bombay to raise a fund on her behalf. Among the native community, however, hardly a single voice, except that of Mr. Malabari, a Parsee gentleman, has been raised in her favor, and the so called reformers who agitate loudly for representative institutions say no word for the alteration of the cruel law which the Bombay court has been reluctantly compelled to enforce.—Calcutta Letter to London Times.

No remedy which has ever been introduced has been found so effective in promoting the healthy action of the bowels as VanWert's Liver Pellets. 25 cents at druggists or by mail.

Non-Cents.

It is almost impossible to attach any importance to one cent; but at the same time, it is a very important coin at times.

It will take a circular to California, and it will make you madder than a hatter and a March hare combined, when you go to pay your fare on the horse-car and find that you have but four cents and a ten-dollar bill. Then will the wanting cent seem colossal. Especially when you see the conductor fold your ten dollar bill and stow it carefully in his vest pocket, and then begins to deal you out a lot of change that looks as though it had been in circulation since the revolutionary war.

The penny, it seems, was made to put on church plates, and although a man may say it amounts to nothing, he will strike matches and lift mats and crawl about on a horse-car to find the one he drops. It is so small a coin that you have to take off your glove to get hold of it in your pocket, and yet it is so large that when the baby swallows it, the chances of the baby's living are sometimes not worth a cent.

When a man speaks of a quail he will sarcastically call it a little bit of a thing about the size of a cent; and he will speak of a girl's freckles, sarcastically, as being great big freckles, the size of a cent.

This is all we know about Philadelphia mint sauce.—Puck.

RETRIBUTION.

BY "THE DUCHESS."

She gave herself to me; she swore she would marry me, caring for that other all the time. Did you mark how she shrunk and cowered away from me? How she paled, and glanced at me as though perdition lay in the sight of me?"

He is glancing over his mother's shoulder toward the opposite wall. His eyes are dark and wild; he is gazing at something. That past scene in the library is again before him—is again being enacted—brought to light by his disordered fancy.

"Granit, think of something else," implores his mother, in a frightened manner. His voice, his gestures, terrify her.

"From me she shrunk—to turn to him! How her eye lit as she saw him! To him she cried for protection from me! She held out her arms to him! She clung to him!" His breath is coming in painful gasps. "There was adoration in the glance she directed at him! To gain such a glance I would have died. Well!" he stretches out his arms and then he clasps his head, "because of such a glance I have died. She has slain me!"

"Granit, my poor boy, do not talk so wildly. Forget this girl; think now of what is the best thing for you to do."

"I have thought of that—that is all arranged."

His tone is impatient.

"Where are you going, darling?" she asks, faintly.

"Nowhere."

His manner is dull and listless.

"Rouse yourself," entreats she, "you must go for awhile. You say you have arranged all. Tell me, then, where you are going!"

"A long journey."

"Long journeys nowadays can be compassed in a very little while."

"That is true. Mine will be the shortest passage on record," he draws his breath sharply. "What happened to her, when I left?"

"She fainted. Mr. Duran"——

"Keep his name out of it, can't you?" interrupts he, violently. "Go on! She fainted. Well, what then?"

"They had considerable difficulty in recovering her, I have been told. I was not there," says Lady Valworth, nervously. "She was naturally a good deal upset by the whole affair. I suppose you frightened her."

"You say I hurt her."

"You sent her with some force against the wall. You did not mean it," hastily—"but when one is agitated as you were, one hardly knows what one is doing. You" anxiously—"must not take that so much to heart; you did her no real harm. You must not be uneasy."

"Take it to heart? I wish I had killed her!" The words come with a hiss through his clinched teeth; his face is white and distorted with passion. "That she should live, and live with him, is the galling thought; that is more than I can bear. How her little white fingers fastened on his arm! Liar that she is! how she deceived and ruined me! Body and soul she has destroyed."

"Oh, not your soul, darling! There is time—repentance."

"There is very little time now and I am unrepentant."

He throws up his head and points to the window. The lamps in the room are waning, and through the closely curtained window the first streaks of coming morn are stealing with a persistency that will not be denied. Day is breaking, and with it his mother's heart. The cruel light will tear him from her, will carry him—whither?

"You have not told me where you are going," she says, pressing her hand against her heart to still its throbbing.

"I can tell no one that."

"What! not your mother? Granit, do not fear, I will betray you; anything you say to me now will be sacred. Tell me where it is you mean to go."

"I cannot."

"But why—why?"

"For the simple reason that I don't know myself." There is a curious gleam in his eyes that disturbs her and makes her forget the flippancy of his tone. "It is to a strange land I will wend my way before the day is very much older. A stranger in a strange land! My reception will be a cold one, or perchance a hot one."

He laughs wildly. His merriment is, however, shortlived, breaking off almost as it began, and ending in a dismal silence.

"You are thinking of Africa," says his mother, trembling, she scarcely knows why. "If you still refuse to let me know exactly where you are going, at least promise you will write to me. Granit, my dear, dear son, promise me that."

"I will promise you anything you like, though I doubt if you would care to keep up the correspondence." There is something terrible in his manner, which has grown frivolous in a ghastly way, and his face is livid. "She will live and prosper," he says inconsequently as it seems to Lady Valworth; "but she will have to remember. I will compel her to do that! And remember you," laying his hand roughly upon his mother's shoulder, "remember well that my last words were that she was responsible for all!"

"I will not believe these are your last words. You will return to me, when all this has blown over you will return, if even for a month or so. Promise me that, too, Granit."

"From where I am going no man returns."

"That is not true. There is no place on earth from which you cannot come back to me, if you only will."

"No place on earth!" He repeats her words slowly. "My place on earth will know me no more." He seems to wander away from the actual meaning of her words to the mere sound of them. "I have no longer any place on earth," he says dreamily.

"You have a place in my heart always," cries she, with a sudden burst of weeping. She throws her arms round him, and clings to him in an embrace that is full of despair. "Alas! my one child! my pretty baby! that it should come to this," she moans, bitterly.

"You will not forget my message to her?"

Though he is supporting her half fainting form, he hardly heeds her; her words bear no meaning to him. His mind is ever with the girl who had unconsciously betrayed him, whom he has loved—whom he still loves, with a terrible intensity.

"I shall forget nothing. When do you start?"

"When you leave me."

"There will be no train, darling, until 7 o'clock."

"I shall require no train."

"But how, then, will you go?"

Again he [illegible]—that loud, discordant laughter that chills the blood in her veins.

"Do not be uneasy about me. I have provided for myself a [illegible]

"No, [illegible] I must be alone for awhile, and my time is short. Good-by."

Stooping, he presses his lips to her forehead.

"For the moment?" she answers anxiously.

"Good-by."

There is no denial of her question in his manner, and she is fain to be content with it. She clings to him, and embraces him warmly; an embrace he returns in kind. She moves as if to leave him. Almost as she reaches the door, his voice stops her.

"One word," he says huskily. "Do not—do not be unkind to her! When I am gone, do not show or feel resentment toward her!"

He makes her a sign with his hand to declare he has said all he had called her to hear, and going out, she closes the door behind her.

The sound of her retreating footsteps has died away. He is alone! He stretches out his arms wearily, as one might who has just flung from him some cruel burden, and drawing back the curtains, opens wide the window and gazes out upon the growing day. Already the sun has mounted the heavens, and from the east soft rosy bars of tremulous light are descending upon the distant hill tops. From among the laurels comes the thrilling music of innumerable birds; from the wood the cooing of the gentle pigeons. A rose that has climbed up the wall, more ambitious than its fellows, thrusts its scented petals into his hand.

Mechanically he accepts the gift, and breaking the flower from its stem, inhales its perfume. It is sweet with dew, and sweet as only a morning rose can be, with all the cool moisture of the dead past night still on it, and buried in its heart. Boyle, still as if without thought, having trifled with the flower, carries it to a table near and puts out his hand toward a vase filled with water. The action rouses him. He checks himself, and a after a brief pause flings the flower upon the ground. He had been about to place it in the water with a view to its preservation when that revulsion of feeling came over him. To save it from instant destruction—why? That he might see it upon the morrow? The morrow? Where will he be then?

He sets his heel upon the flower and crushes it out of all loveliness. Death is rushing toward him on swift black wings—shall that senseless flower be spared? It is a very poor, a very paltry bit of malice, yet it nerves him, and brings him again face to face with his indomitable resolve.

Crossing the room, he opens a case lying upon a bureau and draws from it a revolver. He runs his hand lightly over it, and the cool touch of the steel seems to steady him. Having assured himself that it is loaded, he lays it down again and turns to a writing table.

His hand is firm, the writing bold as ever. A few words, explaining where the famous sapphires (now dismantled and unset) may be found in his rooms in town, are addressed to his mother. Bold words, with no endearing commencement, no affectionate termination. To him the sapphires are of no further use. It is as well that Millicent should have them again.

He flings the pen aside, and, rising to his feet, paces hurriedly up and down the room. He can walk now. But like a flash it bursts upon him that soon movement will be impossible. There upon the carpet he lies like a stick—a stone! The great grand fever of living is tearing through his veins. His pulses throb, his heart beats—there are years of life within the tall, slender, firmly built frame that looks its last through the open window. The early morning air, fresh and fragrant, rushes gayly in. Heavens! how fair the world is! Was it ever so fair as to-day?

He takes up the revolver again and lifts it to his mouth. There is a short hesitation. His mind travels backward. His brain reels. There!—there! she is before him again! A slight form, clothed all in palest blue. A face divine! Her lovely arms! Her eyes—dark—liquid. See, now, they gleam for—Duran! Curse him! To him she holds out her hands. To him she gives herself. She turns——

A groan of agonized remembrance bursts from his lips. Then follows a sharp report! It rings through the house! He sways, and a corpse, disfigured in a horrible manner, falls heavily to the ground. All is over.

Through the window the light breeze enters merrily, and floating downward, lifts the hair, that is still unwet, from the dead man's head, and softly, delicately, plays with it. There is only the breeze. All other motion is gone. So intense is the silence that reigns within the chamber, that a tiny bird, emboldened by it, perches on the sill of the window, and breaks forth into a morning carol, loud and shrill. A carol! A requiem rather!

And now the silence is broken. Through the passages beyond comes the sound of hurrying feet. There is one that runs before the others. Nearer, nearer they come, and still the bird carols, the wind plays—the dead man lies there, careless—unknowing.

A touch upon the handle of the door. The wind still revels in lifeless tresses, but the bird has flown away. The door opens——

Upon the threshold stands—his mother.

THE END.

Saved the Empress' Life.

Many American physicians are among the ablest, but their profession rests on a false hypothesis. It has nothing to do with science, and cannot have until it has vastly advanced. Marked improvement has been made in therapeutics. Our physicians compare very favorably with those of Europe. After the Empress Eugenie had given birth to the prince imperial an important operation was necessary, and all the celebrated doctors of Paris and several American doctors resident there were called in, among them Dr. Johnson, now dead. During her treatment it was found to their consternation that the blood had left her brain. She was in momentary peril of losing her life. A solemn consultation took place. Nobody could advise except Johnson, who declared he could remedy the evil. He held her up by the heels and the blood flowed back to her brain. He saved her life. Not one of the Parisian sages would have dreamed of offering so monstrous an indignity to the empress of the French, but the indignity, as they afterward acknowledged, was preferable to her death.—Chicago News.

Miss Rose Elizabeth Cleveland called to see Mrs. Secretary Whitney's [illegible] baby when she was in Washington, and she thought it her duty to talk to the infant. So, after the usual greeting, she said:

"My dear Mrs. Whitney, will you kindly permit me to take your progeny in my arms?"

"Why, of course," replied the happy mother.

Rose Elizabeth took the child much as she would be likely to take hold of a dynamite cartridge. After she had arranged it to her satisfaction she gazed into its face and observed:

"You are a remarkably handsome specimen of infantile humanity."

The specimen looked at Rose in blank amazement.

"Great pulchritude is noticeable in your optical organs," Rose continued.

The mystified look on baby's face deepened.

"You are a saccharinous child."

At this the baby began to be really frightened, and made an attempt to jump into her mother's arms. Miss Cleveland held her tight, though, and said:

"I fear she does not yet comprehend the vernacular."

This was more than baby could stand, and she sat up a series of lusty "boo-hoos" which soon caused Rose to surrender her to her mother, with the observation:

"She seems to be apprehensive of corporeal injury."

"She hasn't seen many people yet, and it's a little strange for her," apologized Mrs. Whitney. Then she turned to the baby who was nestling in her arms still eyeing Rose Elizabeth with suspicion, and added:

"Ze lady wouldn't hurt mamma's 'ittle dirlie, would s'e?"

"I presume," said Rose, not knowing what to say, "that the period of dentition has not yet arrived?"

"Oh dear, no," replied Mrs. Whitney; "baby hasn't begun to teeth yet."

"Well, I think I must take my departure now, if you will permit me to kiss the child."

Mrs. Whitney was willing, but baby positively refused to be kissed, and Miss Cleveland departed.

After the door was closed Mrs. Whitney was heard to remark to the baby:

"Did 'e (kiss) bad 'oman scare (kiss) my (kiss) 'ittle tootsy (kiss) wootsy, Hippety, hoppety, pippety pop!" (kiss).—Tid-Bits.

SAVED.

I'm glad I am saved! I am glad I am saved. It was Higgins' T. & C. Compound that did it.

Concerning Gen. Grant's Memoirs.

At the meeting of the army and navy club of Connecticut on Wednesday, April 27, to commemorate the anniversary of Gen. Grant's birthday, the toast master read the following interesting data concerning the publication of Gen. Grant's book:

In binding the cloth books, there were 44,359 square yards of cloth used, or if put into one piece it would make a strip one yard wide and 25 1-5 miles long.

The gold used in stamping, lettering, etc., on all the styles of binding, if coined, would make $15,446.47. The price paid the gold-beaters for this gold was $21,639.50.

There was 276 barrels of binder paste used, weighing about 69,000 pounds.

There were 27,882 sheep skins used, 7,221 goat skins and 138 calf skins. As none of these skins was split, this represents, of course, the killing of an equal number of animals.

There were about 302,310 reams of paper used in the printing, which weighed about 1,813,880 pounds, or 906⅓ tons. This put into one piece, would make a strip two feet wide and 1,682¾ miles long.

If the books were piled up in one row the narrow way—that is the same as they would stand in a book-case—it would take a shelf 19½ miles long to hold them.

If the pages of the books were joined together they would make a strip of paper six inches wide and 6,729⅓ miles long.

Forty one steam presses were working day and night, over 1,000 operatives were employed and over 9,000 book agents engaged in distributing the book. To these latter—who were mainly old soldiers and the widows of soldiers—was paid in commissions for selling the book, considerably more than $4,000,000 cash.

[illegible] MAN.

Robert J. Burdette, Representative American Humorist.

Burdette's work both as a writer and a lecturer is generally appreciated, and he enjoys well deserved popularity. He is a genial, kind-hearted fellow, of a happy and affectionate disposition. His life has always been most exemplary, and admiration of his entertaining qualities is supported by esteem for his character.

He was born at Greensboro, Greene county, Pa., July 30, 1844. When he was 2 years old the family removed to Cincinnati, O. In 1860 another change was made—from "Porkopolis" to Peoria, Ill. There Burdette received his education, the finishing touches of which were given at the High School, where he was graduated when 17 years of age. Burdette was a private soldier from 1862 to the end of the Union. Returning to Peoria he procured an employment connected with the local mail service. It was in 1869 that he became directly associated with literary matters, being night editor on a Peoria newspaper. The next year he married Miss Carrie Garrett, who was an invalid and expected to die. Her illness had been induced by a dispute with her father, who was opposed to her mating with Burdette. After marriage she regained strength, but was deformed and unable to sit up during the rest of her life, which ended only about two years ago. She was a woman of ability and literary aptitudes, and started her husband in the work which has earned him money and fame. The humorist continued his connection with the local press, with the extending recognition of the merit of his "funny" compositions until 1872, when he removed to Burlington, Iowa, as a member of the staff of the Hawkeye. By 1876 he had risen to be managing editor of that paper. In the year named he began his career as a public lecturer. He now resides at Ardmore Pennsylvania.

Burdette works regularly for publication in the newspapers. In the pressure inseparable from the process of "filling up holes" for stated hours of "going to press," Burdette is not at all times happy in his attempts to be funny, but it is wonderful how much good sense, with laughter-provoking qualities to season it withal, he has written. He rhymes easily and often, but the most of his work is in prose. Some of his best effusions have been published in book form.

A WORD WITH YOU.

Bangor, Maine, [illegible]

[illegible] BROWN, M. D. [illegible] cure of all diseases of the stomach, liver, and kidneys, that has ever been known in New England. This history, together with testimonials from many prominent people whom you will know, of relief secured and cures effected from sufferings and torture by these diseases, will be mailed to you if you send us your address. Better that in this issue we tell you where relief can be found. We have come late to the work with BROWN'S SARSAPARILLA. Naturally we have taken hold of the cases which other remedies, although advertised with persistency and at marvelous expense, have failed to cure. The results have been wonderful. Nowhere have we failed to give relief, and in no case where persistent and faithful use according to directions has been made of Brown's Sarsaparilla, has it failed to CURE any or all diseases of the blood, stomach, liver, and kidneys. Mrs. Rebecca Cunningham of East Bangor, Maine, heard of it, read of it, tried it, and was cured of her weakness in kidneys and troubled liver. Carlton P. Williams of Amesbury, Mass., says he is entirely cured of what physicians diagnosticated as Bright's disease, and pronounced incurable. Eben Morrison of Cleveland, Ohio, advised by a friend to use Brown's Sarsaparilla for his kidney troubles, did so and was cured. Benj. Hill of New York Corner, at 69 years of age, gained strength and vitality for his blood, and health to continue his daily duties. Tumors dispersed for Reuben Severance and Aaron French by Brown's Sarsaparilla. Scrofula cured in Hartley B. Fisher, Corinna, Me. But why continue? Get our book on good health and read for yourself the astounding results secured by the use of Brown's Sarsaparilla, and remember these cases are those where eminent physicians have failed to find a remedy, and other medicines, advertise well and popularly introduced, have not benefitted, but Brown's Sarsaparilla, having been taken as a last resort, has proved efficacious and no other treatment was needed. Now with these facts in evidence, substantiated by reputable citizens accompanied by affidavits of prominent people, why not make this remedy the first, as it will then prove to you the only resort when you, your family or your neighbors are suffering from any of the almost numberless disorders which arise from a deranged stomach, and inactive liver, or weakened kidneys? Now a word in regard to the preparation and combination of this wonderful remedy. Our Mr. Warren for many years enjoyed the confidence of the late W. H. Brown, M. D., and in the prosecution of his business of pharmacist hundreds of times has he been called upon to put up the prescription, which is now compounded for popular sale, and for a few years has been known to the public as Brown's Sarsaparilla. It is entirely vegetable in its combination; the most powerful alterative-tonic properties known to the materia medica being skillfully prepared on a scientific basis, and the result of a perfect medicine for the relief and cure of dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation, biliousness, loss of appetite, inflammation of kidneys and bladder, Bright's disease, dropsy, gravel, jaundice, heartburn, rheumatism, neuralgia, scrofula, erysipelas, salt rheum, diabetes; for the removal of impurities of the blood; to incite to proper activity the sluggish torpid liver; and to strengthen and relieve disorders of the stomach. It also acts like a charm as a remedy for all female complaints. Brown's Sarsaparilla has such curative powers and is of such immeasurable value to sufferers that we have decided to commence the publication of a series of extensive articles, detailing its properties uses and cures; and hereafter you can receive such information from the columns of this paper. You can obtain the medicine of any dealer. Yours truly, ARA WARREN & CO.

[illegible] THACKERAY.

[illegible] EDITOR

With this issue THE TIMES enters upon the [illegible] year of its existence pledged to still labor zealously in behalf of its readers. Encouragement and support are powerful incentives to exertion and we gratefully acknowledge the kind words and favors extended to THE TIMES during the past year. THE TIMES has had its quota of changes in editors since the initial number, which appeared in 1868 under the management of Messrs. George. E. Williams, and J. M. Williams, but there yet remains to be found an issue where it has failed in its endeavor to live up to its motto quoted from Thackery, and always found in the first column of its editorial page.

Many names are still found on our list who took the first number of THE TIMES and for nineteen years it has been a weekly visitor to their homes. We look with pride upon this fact and know that these escpecially are interested in our welfare. We also look with pride upon the names of those who have since been added to our list of subscribers, who realize that their support is essential to our success and believe THE TIMES a valuable auxiliary to this community. We are endeavoring to increase our usefulness in this locality and are more able to accomplish this as our circulation increases. As an inducement, we offer premiums, all of which are valuable and instructive. Here, readers and friends of THE TIMES, is where you can assist us by placing before your friends and neighbors the advantages offered and the gain and propriety of supporting a local paper which always endeavors to work for your interests. In closing THE TIMES extends its heartfelt thanks to the merchants and business men, who have favored it with job work and advertising during the past year and hopes that they feel compensated for any and all outlay made in this direction.

Ladies: If you want a sun umbrella, you will find a splendid line at H. & A. Rosenbloom's.

Mr. Albert Egerton of Albany the landscape architect who drew the plan for improving the village park, was in town yesterday, in consultation with a committee from the Village Board and Village Improvement Society. It was decided not to do any ploughing until fall, to lay out and make the paths so that they would all meet in the centre of the park and there leave a place for the soldiers' monument should the G. A. R. post decide to place it there, paint and remove the band stand to the open space at the north part of the park. Work will be entered upon at once. About $500 has been raised to be used for the improvement.

Our five great special offers are still open for those who subscribe or pay advance subscription to THE TIMES.

Mothers: Don't forget to bring your boys to H. & A. Rosenbloom's where you can get excellent bargains. We have special lots by which you can save 50 cents on the dollar.

D. C. Draper at his new store No. 6, First street will sell for the next 10 days nearly all lines of Groceries, Crockery, Lamps, and Plated ware at Prices that will help advertise his goods. Also a new and complete line of Watches, and Jewelry, that it will pay you to price.

THE following is something that you have read before and we have published before. They are the words of David Davis. Read them, ponder well and then ask yourself if the whole is not the unadulterated truth: "Each year every local paper gives from $100 to $5,000 in free lines for the benefit of the community in which it is located. No other agency can or will do this. The local editor, in proportion to his means, does more for his town than any other ten men, and in all fairness, man with man, he ought to be supported, not because you like him or admire his writings, but because a local paper is the best investment a community can make. It may not be brilliant or crowded with great thoughts but financially it is more of a benefit to a community than preacher or a teacher. Understand us now, we do not mean morally or intellectually, but financially, and yet on the moral question you will find the majority of the local papers are on the right side of the question. To-day the local editors do the most work for the least money of any man on earth. Subscribe for your local paper, not as a charity but as an investment."

Boys; If you want to keep cool and comfortable, H. & A. Rosenbloom are prepared to fit you out as they have a large and exceedingly fine lot of seersuckers especially for boys.

Considerable discussion is now going on about water works which is increased from the fact that no water is now supplied to the fountains which proved to be such a convenience to man and beast during the hot season last year. As everyone knows there is no contract now existing between the water works company and the village and for that reason the former have seen fit to cut off the supply to the fountains which has been running free of charge for the past four months.

There is no earthly reason why the village board should not endeavor to [illegible] contract with the company for [illegible] of water for fire and village [illegible]

[illegible] have asked that a com[illegible] board be appointed to [illegible]

[illegible] under [illegible] of the world which labor creates. It will be observed that both profit and wages alike depend upon the price at which goods can be sold, and this is determined in the open market, and cannot be decided by the award of the mill, nor by the workmen themselves. Of the sum received from the sale of goods there must be deducted the amount necessary to pay for cost of materials, insurance, taxes, and general expenses, besides a reserve to be set aside as a sinking fund for repairs, improvements and maintenance of capital in an efficient state. After allowing for these expenses, there remains a sum to be divided between capital and labor. Of this remainder what are the shares which capital and labor each saves for itself? Mr. Edward Atkinson, the well-known political economist, has treated this question with great ability, in his article entitled "The Margin of Profits," in The Century for April, which should be studied by every thoughtful man. He is so well known as an accurate and careful writer that we may accept his statements without queston. He tells us that at the present time any safe business which will yield six per cent. net profit and four per cent. to be set aside for repairs and improvements, will attract all the capital necessary to conduct it, which will be subscribed as fast as a market can be found for the goods. If more than ten per cent. is earned, then capital will be very quickly subscribed, thus creating competition, and the rate of profit will be reduced to ten per cent. at most, and in all safe occupations of the present day to a much lower rate. Admitting this to be a fact, that any safe industry will not yield ten per cent., it must be certain that labor secures at least ninety per cent. of the joint product of capital and labor, or nine parts in ten. Mr. Atkinson observes that strikes occur most frequently in those branches of industry where the margin of profit is least, and gives an instance where, upon investigating a certain great strike which recently occured he found that if labor had secured to themselves the whole profit which satisfied the owners in a fairly prosperous art, the average wages would have been increased only $15 to $20 on average earnings of $500 a year. There is one great point which working people have failed to comprehend. It is this: that under the influence of competition of capital with capital and of labor with labor, it appears that in the last fifty years capital has been securing a decreasing share, while labor has been securing an increasing share of a continually increasing product. Mr. Atkinson illustrates this fact very forcibly by showing that in a successful factory which he analyzed he found that in 1840 the farmers' daughters of New England earned $175 a year for thirteen hours' work per day; and the sum necessary to be taken from the product of each operative to give capital ten per cent. was $113. In that same factory, to-day, a woman working ten hours gains $290 per year; and if capital can get $70 from the product, it will earn ten per cent. The share of the laborer is double per hour, while the share of the employer has diminished forty per cent. In fact, much more: for the factory cannot now earn ten per cent. Now, in view of these facts, how absurd it is to imagine that wages can be arbitrarily forced to a higher standard! How much would the condition of labor be improved if it secured to itself the use of the whole margin of profit which is now added to the wealth of the country? What would become of the working-people if the small margin of profit which now satisfies the capitalist be taken from him? Does anybody suppose a man will invest his money without some hope of gain? There are many things the laboring man must learn; but first of all he should learn to thrive. Some writer has said this is the most difficult thing to teach man. In this country political freedom has made every man an individual, and he may hope, by thrift and industry and sobriety, to rise from the ranks of labor and join the ranks of the capitalist. Why should he surrender his liberty into the hands of another? It is contrary to the whole spirit of the land and of those men who framed our Constitution. Every man exercises his own right in choosing a wife, and why should he not do his own thinking? Who has a right to say you shall not do any work until you are paid such and such prices for it? When we see men striking without a grievance, out of "sympathy," we are inclined to ask the question, When did sympathy of that kind ever feed or clothe a family? You might as well say that because certain creditors are pressing your neighbor, you will make an assignment, and ruin your business out of "sympathy." If the millions of dollars which have been lost in this country by labor during the past year could have been applied in teaching the workingman to think, it would have been a move in the right direction. When you appeal to men's passions instead of to their reasoning faculties, you touch the spring which is more apt to lead to chaos than to prosperity.—E. W. O. in Wade's Fiber and Fabric.

It was reported about town Monday that Hon. T. Wells Green of Caughdenoy formerly Member of Assembly from this district had become insane, but later reports say that although he has been very sick there are strong hopes of his recovery.

[illegible] to the Queen of the Sandwich Islands.

The Royal Hawaiian arrived in this city on Tuesday evening with her attendants and was driven to the Arlington Hotel, where apartments had been engaged for her. In one of her parlors the Queen found a basket of roses from President Cleveland awaiting her, at which she expressed much delight. On the following morning her majesty called on the President, and in the afternoon Mrs. Cleveland returned the call, after which the foreigners were driven around the city to various points of interest.

In the evening they attended some exercises given at the deaf mute college. The Queen is much interested in this kind of work, and the President of the college knowing this, arranged an entertainment and invited her. To-day the royal party was taken down the Potomac on the "Dispatch" to Mt. Vernon accompanied by members of the Cabinet and Diplomatic Corps. This evening a dinner will be given at the White House in honor of the Queen, to which the Cabinet and ladies, foreign ministers and ladies, Chief Justice Waite, General Sheridan, Admiral Porter and a few others will be invited.

Her royal highness is in complexion about as dark as the average mulatto, is of medium height, and weighs apparently about 200 pounds. She seems to be about 50 years of age, but her complexion is too dark for accurate guessing at age. Her traveling attire was a long, black mantle reaching to her feet, a crape veil streaming down her back after the fashion in this country, and around her neck and hanging down in front of her dress a very long fur tippet, which looked decidedly uncomfortable and unseasonable on a day when ice-cream and soda were in lively demand.

A warmth prophetic of summer has settled down on Washington. Overcoats and mantles have been doffed and parasols, fans and such such accessories have taken their places. Everybody is talking about the coming Drill, and everybody who works wants holiday during Drill week, even to sewing girls and school children. There has been some trouble about music for the Drill, and it seems Washington musicians will not be represented. No local bands will play. Good bands can be brought here from elsewhere at a lower price.

The difficulty grew out of the feeling between civilians and Government-paid musicians in the marine and artillery bands. It will probably lead to a defection of a branch of the National League of Musicians, an organization which exists for the purpose of protecting civilian players from the competition of Government musicians.

The Smithsonian Institution has just added another specimen of sculpture to its many precious relics. This is an idol from one of the Polynesian Islands, which has recently been Christianized by French Missionaries. It is about nine feet long by three wide, is chiseled out of common rock, and is very ugly. It started on its way to the United States nearly a year ago, from its native land, and after many misventures, was finally landed at Panama, where it was quarentined for a time. When it was discovered that it was neither dangerous nor contagious, the idol was set at liberty, and again proceeded on its travels. It was carried across the isthmas of Panama on the railroad, free of charge, and then boarded a ship at Aspinwall for Washington.

A few evenings since some young doctors and dentists who gardusted from the National University here, had the pleasure of receiving their diplomas from the hand of President Cleveland. He is the chancellor of the university and Judge McArthur of this city is vice chancellor. The two walked arm in arm at the head of the faculty and took their seats on the platform. The Judge delivered a address during the evening which was full of encouragement to women. He said they were going to throw the doors of these institutions wide open to women and place them on an equal footing wish men, where they will attend the same classes, be instructed by the same professors, receive the same diplomas, signed by the President of the United States, which will carry them anywhere in the world.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury,

as Mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucus surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do are ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury and is taken internally and acts directly upon the blood and mucus surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure that you get the genuine, it is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Sold by Druggists, price 75c per bottle.

[illegible] the writer's preconceived notion of him. The question will be what Frenchmen will think of this estimate of their idol. Taine has told a great many unpleasant truths to his countrymen of late concerning the revolution and their great emperor. President Noah Porter writes on "Physiological Ethics;" Ellis H. Roberts on "Moral Aspects of the Tariff; and Levi Parsons on "The Uses of Political Parties." "Astronomical Photography" is treated at a length by Charles A. Young, who believes that the science has a glorious future before it. Prof. H. H. Boyesen reviews "The New Literature of Norway and Denmark," of which so little is known outside of those countries, for the reason chiefly that it is an imaginative literature and does not fit itself readily to the other nationalities. Rose Hawthorne Lathrop contributes the story of the number. "A Touch of Sublimity." The "Record" is a feature of this publication. It presents a summary of the world's progress during the last six months, American, foreign, literary, scientific, and in art and achaeology. Such a record will often be useful for reference, and the two departments last mentioned are very interesting reading at the present day. (New York: A. C. Armstrong & Son.

The Montague-Turner Opera Co.

This opera company which is to appear at the opera house on Saturday evening in Wallace's brilliant opera, "Maritana" has received great praise. The following is from a Lockport paper of recent issue:

"Our music-loving people were out in force, the lower part of the house being fully occupied, and a large number in the gallery. It was an occasion of rare enjoyment which will long be remembered by all present, who we think will agree with us that the company is composed of the best singers who have visited this city in many years.

It is clear that the audience came with high expectations, and as the entertainment progressed it was equally clear that the most sanguine expectations were even more than realized. Seldom have we seen a Lockport audience more completely en rapport, and the brilliant achievements of the singers were promptly recognized by emphatic applause.

Where all did so well "comparisons are odious," but the structure of the opera is of a character that gave especial prominence to Miss Montague as Maritana and to Charles Turner as Don Cæsar Be Bazan, and it is no disparagement to the other singers to say that these two reaped the largest share of the honors of the evening. Miss Montague's singing was faultless throughout, exhibiting a voice that is almost marvelous for its strength, compass, purity, flexibility and sweetness. Her acting was superb, whether she expressed the aspirations of the maiden, the longings of an unsatisfied love while she hardly knew whether she was wife or widow, or the joy of love's fruition when the invisible husband she married was restored to her.

Mr. Turner was so much at home in the role of the rollicking, adventurous and chivalrous Don Cæsar De Bazan as to favor the suspicion that it is at least not an uncongenial character."

On Saturday evening about 8 o'clock while the Boston Bazaar was crouded with customers, a crash was heard which gave the impression that a cyclone or earthquake had struck Fulton. It was soon discovered, however, that such was not the case, but that a part of the ceiling about eight foot square had fallen upon lamps, vases and shades that were underneath, breaking a large number into fragments and doing damage to the extent of about fifteen dollars.

[illegible] of the Coffin family and relatives of all present over fifty years of age, and one embracing the entire gathering. One large room was filled with furniture, farm and household implements of 'ye olden time,' the old fashioned fire place with huge iron crane and andirons and back log surrounded with pots and kettles, bake oven &c., of early date. Spinning wheels for wool and flax, reels, swifts, hand cards, flax hetchels, bread trays and many other curious and interesting devices were exhibited. A number of useful presents were given Mrs. Coffin and when some one proposed that a modern chair for invalids be procured the money was quickly contributed by the visiting guests. The day passed pleasantly and near six o'clock the line of carriages which had lined the street on either side rapidly disappeared. The entertainment was made entirely by her son, Alexander Coffin, a well to-do farmer living on the old homestead.—Cor. Oswego Times.

We have just received a large and beautiful line of parasols, which we shall sell at prices guaranteed to be as low as any store in northern New York.

[From the Utica Herald]

UTICA, N. Y., May, 9.

The offerings to-day were only about 700 boxes larger than last week's and upon inquiry among factorymen we find that they number one-third less cheese than at this time a year ago. Others are making nearly as much as they were at this time last year, but [illegible] the early opening this year, there has been but a small increase in the make thus far, and two weeks from the present time there will have been no increase at all, because of the smaller make each day. One of our large factories that was making 31 cheese a year ago, is now making only 14. Another that was making 19 last year is now turning out 12 each day. Another that was 18 now makes only 7. These are a few of the figures obtained. In a few instances in the valleys some small dairies have been turned out to run; but in the great majority of cases cattle will not be turned to pasture until the last of this week or fore part of next.

Sales to-day are as follows: 9 lots, 570 boxes at 11c.; 6 lots, 400 boxes at 11¼c.; 24 lots, 1,570 boxes, at 11¼c.; 4 lots, 170 boxes, at 11½c.; 2 lots, 30 boxes, white, 11¼c.; 30 boxes, white, 11¼c.; Sales 2,857 boxes; commissions 1,760 boxes; total 4,317 boxes. Ruling price 11¼c. Transactions of corresponding day last year, 3,500 boxes, all consigned; Year before 3,523 boxes at 9 to 9¼c.

For a few fancy lots there was some competition to-day, but beyond these dealers preferred to take the goods on commission.

[illegible] call your attention [illegible] ed firm of Schenck & [illegible] under contemplation [illegible] improvements which will be made in their coal sheds, situated just across the river at the west end of the lower bridge. The work of moving their office close to the road, of increasing the capacity of their sheds and the other improvements will be entered upon in a few weeks.

Two coal wagons are being nicely painted by Lester & Worden and will soon be in use.

Their facilities for handling coal are most excellent, having two different sets of tracks by which the coal is run into their sheds and rendering it possible for one man to dump directly into the sheds a hundred tons a day. For loading and unloading coal they justly claim to have the most convenient and best sheds in Northern New York. Their arrangements for screening coal are most excellent, fourteen large double shutes are so constructed that the coal passes over screens, the clean coal going into the wagon and the dust passing through the sieve into another shute which conveys it into a pile at another part of the shed. This arrangement does away with shoveling and is readily seen to be a great convenience.

The firm is composed of S. C. Schenck, John M. Foster and J. A. Foster. Mr. Schenck, the senior member, established the business about fifteen years ago. He is now located at Toledo, Ohio, where he handles all the Scranton coal shipped by the D. L. & W. company west of Buffalo. The present firm have run the business about ten years. The firm handles domestic and manufacturing coal of all kinds and sizes, employ careful and accomodating drivers and are doing a thriving business.

Decoration Day.

Schenck Post G. A. R. are making unusual preparations for the observance of Decoration Day in this village. A committee from the post consisting of Commander Osborne, Quartermaster Cooper, Adjutant Hewitt and Dr. G. V. Emens have the matter in charge. A distinguished orator will deliver an address at the opera house at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. A male chorus of thirty-three voices will also take part in the exercises under the leadership of Prof. Cooper. Appropriate exercises will also occur at the cemetery.

Is Coming to Fulton.

Prof. O. A. Palmer, one of the most practical and scientific opticians in this country, representing the Edmondson Optical Association of Syracuse (Office No. 63, Weiting Block) will stop one week in Fulton with the well-known jeweler, C. R. Nichols, at his new store on Oneida street, commencing Wednesday, May 18th and closing Tuesday night May 24th, for the purpose of making scientific ocular tests of all classes of defective vision such as Astigmatism, Hypermetropia, Presbyopia, Myopia and all other errors of refraction.

Let everyone try to read this paragraph, also to look at a distance with each eye separately. If any difference is observed you should see an optician at once as you have reason to be alarmed.

ASTIGMATISM.

Astigmatism is a deformity that distorts the vision, and is the cause of much trouble with the eyes.

The symptoms of this alarming condition are pain in and over the eyes when used by any bright light. Gaslight is often almost unendurable when in Church or Theatre, and in some cases the pain extends to the neck and back, affecting the whole nervous system, and in many cases so as to produce prostration.

Presbyopia and Myopia are conditions that should be corrected by a skilled optician.

HYPERMETROPIA.

Hypermetropia is a malformation of the eyeball, and is always congenital. The symptoms of this difficulty are indistinct vision, pain in the eyeball, and inability to see distinctly by artificial light, sometimes seeing well at first but sight fading out after a short use of it.

HEREDITARY DEFECTS.

If a mother in early life is troubled with Hypermetropia or Astigmatism, her children are more than likely to inherit the same, and for this reason thousands of children are born with defective eyes which at an early age become apparent. Such children cannot use spectacles too early.

COMPOUND DIFFICULTIES.

It is often that several of the aforesaid troubles exist in the eyes at the same time, causing a complicated difficulty hard to overcome except by the skillful Optician.

A COMMON MISTAKE.

Too much care cannot be taken to have frames fit perfectly. A poorly fitted frame, even with a well fitted glass, often causes serious trouble and much discomfort. There are over two hundred sizes of frames alone.

Do not forget the time and place, May 18th to 24th with C. R. Nichols the jeweler.

Call and see our elegant line of white goods at a shilling a yard. H. & A. Rosenbloom.

No change appears in the status of the strikes in this village from last week. The stove works are still closed but it is expected that they will open soon with a new set of moulders. At the factory there seem to be no new developments and it is hoped that a general strike will not result as is anticipated by many.

As the 5 p. m. train on the D. L. & W. R. R. was backing to the depot at Oswego last Saturday afternoon, it ran into a horse and buggy belonging to Mr. C. B. Benson, of Minetto. The buggy was occupied by Mrs. Benson and the driver, who were thrown out and luckily escaped injury. The horse was badly hurt and the carriage wrecked.

About forty people attended the second wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. James Stevens, at their home on First street, Oswego Falls, last Wednesday evening. [illegible] The entertainment which was of a literary and musical character opened with an overture by Bogue's orchestra, which was followed by an address of welcome by Father Earley. A quartet composed of Messrs. Cooper, Coit, Hoff and Perkins sung a selection, when Father Earley in a pleasant manner introduced to the audience Miss Celia Kelly of Oswego, who rendered an excellent piano solo in an able manner. In response to an encore she played "Home Sweet Home" with variations. Master Erwin Ellis, dressed as a zouave, gave a skillful exhibition drill which was very pleasing to the audience and for which he was loudly applauded at the close. Mrs. Bowen of Bay City, Mich., sung in a beautiful manner the song "Speak" and received a well deserved encore. Mr. James H. White ex-president of the St. Mary's temperance society of Oswego addressed words of encouragement to members of the Father Mathew society, eulogized Father Earley for the work accomplished under his leadership and for the hold he had on the affections of the people not only in Fulton but in Oswego. He closed by reading two temperance selections, "I Have Drunk my Last Glass" and "A Word to Our Young Men." Mr. N. H. Melius, of Syracuse played in a skillful manner popular airs on the harmonica. He responded to an encore and later in the evening played again at the request of Father Earley. The beautiful little elocutionist, Miss Nellie Healey, aptly presented as Oswego's gem and Fulton's favorite recited "Poor House Nan." In response to a well deserved encore she gave "Barbara Freitchie." Miss Lena Hardy in her peculiarly pleasing manner sung "Spare My Boy" assisted by the quartet. Miss Sullivan of Oswego rendered "What I Saw" and in response to an encore recited a short piece which brought down the house.

Mr. Wm. J. Boggs, a young lawyer of Oswego, made an eloquent address of about 15 minutes duration, which clearly showed that he was a gifted orator of no mean repute.

Mrs. Salidan of this village sang "Cricket on the Hearth," for which she received great applause and an encore. The club swinging of Coleman and O'Hare met with much favor, while Father Earley's address "New Plan of Campaign against Liquor and Saloons" should be printed entire to receive its full credit.

The hall was beautifully decorated with flowers, flags and banners on this occasion and the stage was occupied by President Waugh, Editor Bradt, Dr. Bacon, Mr. Frank Dilts, of this village, and some of the officers of the two societies and Messrs. J. H. White and W. J. Boggs of Oswego.

Still there are those who through thoughtlessness or other reasons will hardly remember a thing unless constantly before them, even though it be for their good and welfare to do so. It would seem that by once telling about the wonderful bargains and great saving it would be sufficient but we can't help telling you again, that we still have and are receiving every day wonderful bargains in Crockery, Glass, Tin, Wooden and Household Goods. [illegible] with the [illegible] The hack [illegible] side. The [illegible] which were pulled down on the side resting in the water and the timbers underneath prevented it from sinking at once in the water that was eight feet deep. Johnson first got out, opened the door and assisted the ladies over the [illegible] debris to the shore. The hack kept gradually sinking and before Foster got out it was up to his waist. The harness was cut from the horses and with the assistance of Albert Kelly, whose farm is near the spot, they were rescued but not until one of the horses was nearly drowned. The hack, containing the dress suits of the gentlemen and the party dresses of the ladies sank and remained in the creek until it was fished out later in the day. Fisk started home with the horses. The rest of the party followed, being compelled to walk the whole distance. It was fortunate that nothing more serious resulted from this disaster and and it was a narrow escape for all.

Harold Bacchus who is somewhat of an amateur photographer took some pictures of the scene of the disaster during the day. The party will retain these as souvenirs.

The cause of the accident was due entirely to the negligence of the proper authorities of Granby in not giving attention to a bridge which was so rotten that the main timbers were crumbling.

The affair we understand has been satisfactorily settled by the town authorities paying all damages done.

OBITUARY.

Alice L. wife of Fred H. Coon, died April 21st, at her home in Whitelaw, after a brief illness. Deceased was born in Hannibal, Oswego county, April 6th, 1865. She was married May 7th 1884, and since that time has resided in that place, and by her kind and genial disposition had endeared herself to a large circle of frinds who were greatly pained to hear of her demise. She was an earnest Christian and will be greatly missed from the church of which she was organist and a zealous worker, and by the Sunday school in which she was an active member and teacher. She leaves a devoted husband and infant son beside numerous relatives and friends to mourn her early death. The heartfelt sympathy of the entire community is extended to the bereaved companion in his great affliction. Her funeral was largely attended at her late residence on the following Sunday, many friends and acquaintances being present from Fulton her former home. Rev. A. H. Cameron officiated, speaking very beautifully from the words, "Her sun is gone down, while it is yet day." The remains were deposited in Whitelaw cemetery.

Young life, though falling like our grain,
Like that revives and spring again;
And, early called, how blest are they
Who wait in Heaven, their harvest day.

⁂

Mrs. Coon was a daughter of Wellington Mattison of Volney, and adopted daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. M. Cox, of Dexterville, and a sister of Mrs. Chester Wells, of Granby Centre. Two brothers are living in Minnesota. The infant child has been adopted by Mrs. Wells.

Mrs. Francis Bennett of Oswego died suddenly at her home in that city last Thursday afternoon. She was in her usual health up to noon of that day. She formerly lived in this village, her husband being a carpenter. The remains were brought here Sunday for burial.

In manuring the orchard some farmers apply ground bone and wood ashes, or muriate of potash mixed, with good success. Fifty bushels of ashes and 1,000 pounds of ground bone make a very liberal dressing for an acre of land and one that will last a number of years. When wood ashes cannot be obtained, 500 pounds of muriate of potash may be used in its place.

The beauty of agriculture as a profession is its varied character and its close contact with nature, says Prof. Wrighton. Agriculture is a born science. It is full of botany and zoology, of geology and entomology. It is full of chemistry, from the dead brown soil to the growing plant, the ripening seed and the animal life which is the eventual and crowning outcome. There is no more varied pursuit in existence, and most others appear very narrow in their scope in comparison with it.

For the next three or four months the agricultural side of the farmer's life will be uppermost, and unless a special interest is manifested in live stock that part of the business will be almost lost sight of. It is not good policy to overlook one interest on account of the attention required by the other, and the wise and judicious farmer will find time to look after his flocks and herds, even if the crops are requiring his attention. The loss in one by neglect may amount to much more than is gained by constant attention given to the other.

Concerning Fertilizers.

It is imposible that the great improvements that have been made in implements for cultivating the soil have in part superseded the necessity which formerly existed for using large amounts of heating manures. So far as these manures are used for the purpose of improveing the mechanical condition of heavy soils, underdraining to remove surplus water from below, and thorough tillage of the soil near the surface, will accomplish it more cheaply. These are, therefore, substitutes for fertilizers so far as the texture of the soil is cocerned, which is all that purely carbonaceous manures can effect. It is true that draining and tillage do not add to the mineral elements in the soil, and by making it more permeable to the roots of plants they help to exhaust it. But this is also true of straw manure, which by heating disintegrates the soil, while really adding little to the plant food which it contains. It is sometimes objected to the concentrated mineral fertilizers that they tend to exhaust fertility because by their use crops may for a time be grown while the vegetable matter in the soil is steadily decreasing. But this objection applies with equal force to any system of manuring which does not replace all the the elemnets of plant food that crops take from the soil. It should be especially strong against relying exclusively on carbonaceous manures which return scarcely any phosphate, nitrogen or potash, and produce their main effects by disintegrating particles of soil in contact with them while they are decomposing.—American Cultivator.

Lawns and Evergreens.

In making a new lawn, the first point is the proper preparation of the soil. It should be thoroughly and deeply tilled, with an abundance of well composted manure worked into it. Then sow four to six bushels of seed to the acre. In making a new lawn, it is well to lay an edge of turf along the paths or roads, and along the margins of the beds that are to be made, whatever the material, secure a good foundation by excavating and filling in broken stone to make a [illegible] bottom.

[illegible] is the month usually preferred [illegible] transplanting evergreens. The essential point is to prevent the roots from [illegible]. From the minute they are taken [from] the soil to the time when they [illegible] again the roots should not get [illegible]. Shelter them from the sun and [illegible] if possible keep them wet.—American Agriculturist.

[illegible] torture. [illegible] had been checked inhumanly high, and the cruel bit, drawing tightly in his mouth, disguised an animal face of unusual charm and intelligence. I was just fancying that the brute had begun to understand and appreciate my words of sympathy, when the lady, who sat in the carriage holding the reins fumbled in her pocket, produced a lump of white sugar and asked me to give it to the horse.

"He is very fond of sugar," she explained, "and I have quite won his heart by feeding it to him. I always carry sugar in my pocket while out driving, and give him a lump at every opportunity. I never knew a horse to be so fond of sugar. Will you please give him another lump?"

"Certainly," I replied; "I see that you are quite as fond of the horse as he is of sweets."

"Yes, I think everything of him."

"Then why do you torture him?"

"Torture my Prince?"

"Yes, that is just what you are doing. Do you not know that the poor animal suffers agony because his head is checked so unnaturally high? His neck is drawn out straight, producing a most ungraceful angle, he holds his head awkwardly, the bit is hurting his mouth and that graceful curvature of neck and carriage of head which are his in nature are now entirely lost. Why do you check him so high?"

She didn't know. She was not aware that high checking was a source of pain to horses, nor that it destroyed their natural beauty. She was amazed at the discovery.

"May I trouble you unloosen his check?" she asked.

When the strap was snapped the horse immediately lowered his head, straightened the cramps out of his handsome neck, shook himself to make sure that he had actually been released from bondage, and then looked round with such a grateful, delighted expression in his intelligent eyes that his mistress declared no more checking straps should be used upon him.—Chicago Herald.

The Sun.

The Sun is about 92,500,000 miles from the earth, and not 95,000,000 as was popularly supposed ten years ago. Computations made at the last transit of Venus across the sun's disc, had established the latter figure, though not exactly. A sun spot measuring one second of distance is 450 miles in size. No telescope can deal with a smaller spot. The speaker had seen spots with the naked eye. How long the sun has given out heat, astronomers are not yet able to tell. It has probably been for millions of years. We see the marks of the sun's heat in the depths of the coal mines where lay lay the vegetation of years ago. The pores of the sun are sometimes wonderful in their nature. The millions of these pores are about all of the sun's surface which can be ordinarily seen through a telescope. The chromosphere which is a stratum of red hot hydrogen 3,000 miles in thickness, can only be seen through an eclipse. Then there is the wonderful corona which varies in size at each eclipse. One seen from Pike's Peak was estimated at 10,000,000 miles in size.

Some Improvement Anyhow.

It is a Curious Fact.

That the body is now more susceptible to benefit from medicine than at any other season. Hence the importance of taking Hood's Sarsaparilla now, when it will do you the most good. It is really wonderful for purifying and enriching the blood, creating an appetite and giving a healthy tone to the whole system. Be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla, which is peculiar to itself.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has largely benefitted the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen, has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, and the German Syrup for Cough and Lung troubles, have perhaps the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted, in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10 cents remain the same size. 42y1eow

My Legacy.

They told me I was heir. I turned in haste,
And ran to seek my treasure,
And wondered, as I ran, how it was placed—
If I should find a measure
Of gold or if the titles of fair lands
And houses would be laid within my hands.

I journeyed many roads; I knocked at gates;
Bespoke to each wayfarer
I met and said, "A hermitage awaits
Me. Art thou the bearer
Of news? Some message sent to me whereby
I learn which way my new possessions lie?"

Some asked me in—naught lay beyond their door;
Some smiled and would not tarry,
But said that men were just behind who bore
More gold than I could carry;
And so the morn, the noon the day was spent,
While empty-handed up and down I went.

At last one cried whose face I could not see,
As through the mist he hasted,
"Poor child! what evil ones have hindered thee,
Till this whole day is wasted?
Hath no man told thee thou art joint heir
With one named Christ, who waits the goods to share?"

The one named Christ, I sought for many days,
In many places, vainly;
I heard men name his name in many ways,
I saw his temples plainly.
But they who named him most gave me no sign
To find him by, or prove the heirship mine.

And when at last I stood before his face,
I knew him by no token,
Save subtile air of joy that filled the place;
Our greeting was not spoken;
In solemn silence I received my share,
Kneeling before my Brother and "joint heir."

My share! No deed of house or spreading lands,
As I had dreamed; no measure
Heaped up with gold; my Elder Brother's hands
Had never held such treasure.
Foxes have holes, and birds in nests are fed—
My Brother hath not where to lay his head.

My share! The tight, like him to know all pain
Which hearts are made for knowing;
The right to find in loss the surest gain;
To reap my joy from sowing
In bitter tears; the with him to keep
A watch by day and night by those who weep.

My share! To-day men call it grief and death;
I see the joy and life to-morrow;
I thank our Father with every breath
For this sweet legacy of sorrow;
And through my tears I call to each, "Joint heir
With Christ, make haste to ask him for thy share!"

—Mrs. Helen Hunt Jackson.

STORY OF A BRACELET.

While Colonel Webley and a party of friends were in a saloon taking a drink, the colonel, addressing the bartender, and at the same time pointing to a bracelet which lay on the carpeted shelf behind the bar, said:

"Nice looking bracelet you have there."

"Yes," the bartender replied, carelessly taking up the bracelet and handing it to the colonel, who upon examining it exclaimed:

"Where did you get it?"

"I got it from the worst looking old bum I ever saw. Pawned it for drinks. Here he comes now."

A man rather advanced in years, covered with rags, entered the room.

"Here exclaimed the colonel, holding out the bracelet, and threateningly advancing towards the old man, "where did you get this? Speak, you old brute."

The man shrank back.

"Where did you get this? Tell me quickly, or I'll have you hustled off to jail."

"There is still additional humiliation left for one so low as I am," said the old fellow, removing his tattered hat and addressing the colonel.

"Just give me a few moments' time, and I will tell you all about it. Yesterday morning I awoke under a tree out in the edge of the town. I was so sick from the effects of whisky that I could scarcely hold my head up. I knew that if found lying there I would be arrested, and with an effort I sat up and leaned back against the tree. Just then a little girl came along, and, seeing me, she started to run away.

"Don't be afraid of me, little girl,' said I, 'God knows that I would not hurt you for the world. I have never injured any one but myself.'

"She turned about and approached me. She was a beautiful child, scarcely twelve years old, I should think. 'Don't be afraid of me,' I repeated, 'for I am not as bad as I look to be."

"What makes you look so bad?" she asked.

"Whisky," I replied.

"And did you know that it would make you look bad?"

"Yes, I knew it would make me ragged and despised. Yes, I knew all that."

"Then, why did you drink it?'

"Oh, I don't know. It seems that I can't help it." Whereupon I began to shed the maudlin and meaningless tears of a drunkard's repentance.

"Don't cry, she said. "You talk like a man that has sense and education, and—"

"Oh, yes," I broke in, charmed with the sensible expressions of the little lady. 'I was at one time regarded as a man of fine sense and of more than ordinary accomplishments. I was a newspaper man, and at different times held high positions, but—well, you see what I am now."

"Do you feel like eating anything?"

"No, I can not eat."

"Let me bring you some milk."

"I think that I can drink a little milk."

"She ran—don't be impatient, sir," addressing the colonel. "My story is not very long. She ran to the house and soon returned with a glass of milk. After I had received its refreshing influence, I told her many things concerning myself; told her of my former success and of my numerous trials and falls.

"It is not to late to do better yet,' she said.

"It is too late to summon the strength,' I replied.

"But it is not too late for God to give you strength."

"[illegible] too late for Him to give to me. [illegible]

"drink again, you could keep the promise?"

"Yes, I think so; I feel that I could."

"Here," she said, taking off that simple little bracelet and handing it to me, "take this and let it always remind you of your promise; I must go to school now. Good bye."

"I came down town and the fight began. I was determined not to violate that beautiful little covenant. I would look at the bracelet and swear that I would never take another drink, but the thirst grew stronger. I prayed as I walked along, yes and became impatient that my prayer was not answered instantly. At last unable to stand it longer I came into this place and pawned the bracelet for whisky. I acknowledge that I am a brute, a dog, unworthy of the slightest notice. A man can go so far, gentlemen, that there is not the slightest hope for him. There is a line which once passed means ruin. You wonder I violated my covenant with that little girl—"

"She my daughter," said the colonel.

"God bless her," replied the vagabond bowing his head. "Your daughter is she? Then whenever you take a drink you are violating a covenant with her—a covenant stronger than the one she made with me. My violating affects me alone; yours may bring her to poverty and rags."

"Here, old man, take the bracelet," said the colonel. "I will pay what you owe here, and give you another trial."

"I am afraid to undertake it," the old fellow replied, stepping back and slowly shaking his head.

"You must," said the colonel, pressing the bracelet into his hand.

"I will try."

Three days afterwards an old man was found lying on a hillside near the town dead. In one of his pockets was found a bracelet wrapped in a piece of paper bearing these words:

"The hand of death is upon me, and I have come out to die in the country, away from the evils that ruined my life. If I knew that one drop of whisky would prolong my life I would not take it. I used to look upon death with horror; now I regard it as the most blessed privilege granted to man. I have been a great blasphemer, and even three days ago had I lain down to die I would have cursed the name of God; but now my soul is filled with a holy love. How odd this will sound to those who have known me, and how little faith some of them would place in what I say; but of this I care nothing. I know now that there is an eternal life, and that I shall share it. The teachings of hundreds of atheistic books—books with which I was once proud to acknowledge acquaintance—have been swept away, and in their place I find a simple, child-like faith. This bracelet belongs to a little girl, daughter of Colonel Webley. Please return the bracelet, and give her this note."

A Good Story of Greeley.

Horace Greeley headed the Republican electorial in this State in 1861, when Lincoln defeated McClellan for the Presidency, and was elected President of the Electorial College when it met. Chauncy M. Depew, who was the Secretary of State, attended the meeting of the College to swear in its members. He witnessed a scene which he is fond of relating as proof that even Mr. Greeley, frank and courageous as he was, had concerning some men an opinion for public consumption and another judgement for private perusal. It was noticed when the Electoral College roll was called that one member was absent. Mr. Greeley, addressing the College, said in substance in a profoundly solemn tone, as if a grave crisis had arrived in the history of the Nation: "Gentlemen, it appears from the roll-call that the Hon. Mr. ——— is absent. In view of our brother's eminent position, distinguished life and great ability, it would be well, it seems to me, to await his coming. We have to perform highly responsible duties; and he is a man I think, who would greatly assist us. I would suggest that a recess of half an hour be taken." The motion to take a recess had hardly been adopted when Mr. Greeley leaned over to Mr. Depew and said grimly: "Chauncey, how long do you think it will take for that drunken beast to get sober?"

It Doesn't Look Like a Poem, But It Is.

How dear to my purse is the new fashioned bonnet, the hat that I bought as a gift to my wife; a small piece of straw with an ostrich plume on it, the last that I'll buy while I still have my life. The hat with a brim and a big swinging feather, and foldered traps that I can't even name, with stuffed birds and roses, and pieces of heather, and a bill from the dealer as long as my frame; that stylish spring bonnet, that new fashioned bonnet, that fancy-priced bonnet that knocked my purse lame.—Minneapolis Tribune.

News About Town.

THE PROPER THING.

Turbans are in favor for city and traveling hats.

Brocaded striped surahs are new for dressy summer toilettes.

The sailor styles are repeated in many garments for boys and girls.

New scarf mantles are in grenadine on which jet pendants are sewed.

Clusters of cock's plumes are a stylish feature for trimming round hats.

The newest guimpes for low summer dresses are entirely of embroidery.

Children's hats have very large brims, much wider in front and on the sides than behind.

Speckled fabrics—not dots, but the merest specks, are in favor for summer silks and gauzes.

For very light dresses for midsummer wear, albatross cloth with figured batistes will be worn.

Pattern dresses in woolens are very stylish and generally popular, and are in great variety.

Parasols are made of unusually long handles of natural wood. The "Tuxedo" is the latest shape.

Beaded coronets, tulle ruches and face trimmings of flowers or ribbons are on the newest bonnets.

Green is the most conspicuous color in spring millinery. It is used in all shades and may be combined with any color.

Black is perhaps the most popular color, after green, for combining with the various colors in trimming hats and bonnets.

Advice to Husbands.

Never talk in your sleep unless you are sure what you are saying.

Don't be discontented. It is much easier to make your wife feel that way.

Never tell your wife that she is a charming singer unless you happen to be deaf.

Don't flatter yourself that you know more than your wife until you get home from her funeral.

Don't be too frendly with your prospective son in-law. He may think you intend to live with him after he is married.

Don't try and fool your wife about drinking unless you happened to marry an idiot. Then it isn't worth while to do so.

Never tell your wife how much better some other woman dresses unless you have more money than you know what to do with.

Never boast to your wife about the value of your past experiences. Your mother-in-law may settle herself down on you next week.

Never find fault with the quality of your wife's cooking. You may possibly drive her to join some cooking club which would be much worse.—Buffalo News.

A Narrow Escape.

"Yes, I had a very narrow escape," said a prominent citizen to a friend. "I was confined to my bed for a year and my friends gave me up for a consumptive's grave, until I began using Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs, and here I am sound and hearty." You will find it for sale by all druggists. Price 50c. and $1. Sample Bottle Free.

Those persons who do not need iron, but who [illegible]

Where He [illegible] the Line.

One afternoon a half-drunken fellow got on one of the Louisville and Nashville sleeping cars bound north. When the conductor showed him to his seat he found a clean, well-dressed, gentlemanly-looking colored man to be his partner in that section and occupying the seat facing his. He at once began in a drunken fashion to abuse the negro, accusing him of trying to "set up for white folks," doing the dude act in charcoal, etc., and finally got up from his seat, declaring that he'd "be d—d if he'd set thar and be outdone by a blasted nigger in a high silk hat."

The conductor, to keep the peace and prevent any disturbance in his car, led the indignant patron of old Kentucky bourbon to a seat in another part of the car.

Next morning the drunken man, who was not a bad fellow at heart, had sobered up considerably, and with some remembrance of his previous misconduct, went over to the colored man's seat and commenced to apologize by saying he had been a "little off his base" the evening before, and did not mean any harm by anything he might have said; that he hadn't anything against "niggers;" and was always their friend when they behaved themselves. So he hoped the stranger would see that in anything that had passed he had meant on personal offense to him.

"That is all right, sir," said the colored man with politeness. "I saw your condition at once, and, of course, under the circumstances, did not consider you responsible for your acts at that time. Your apology this morning makes the amende honorable. Allow me," at the same time offering his card to his former persecutor.

The drunken fellow drew back as if he had been shot. "Look a-here, Mr. Nigger," he cried, in great excitement, "I had made up my mind to stand the cutaway coat and the stovepipe hat, but I'll be darned if I can stand a nigger with a kyard."—Harper's Magazine.

The Cross-Eyed Clerk.

During the late Christmas holidays a large firm in B—— employed as an assistant clerk a young man who was exceedingly cross-eyed.

The especial duty assigned to him was to act as watchman, and prevent the peculation of all sorts of small fancy articles that were lying about the counters for exhibition at that time.

One day a half-grown boy came into the store, and after looking all around, pricing first one thing and then another, among which were some very nice socks, he finally started to go out of the door.

At this moment the new clerk touched him lightly on the shoulder, and inviting him to come to the back part of the store, said to him, politely, "Oblige me by giving me the socks that you have in your back pocket."

"How do you know I have any socks in my back pocket?" demanded the boy in a bold tone.

"I saw you put them there," said the clerk very gently.

The boy looked up into the young man's face in utter amazement. "Are you looking at me now?" he asked, earnestly. "Do you see me this very minute?" he asked, still more earnestly.

"Of course I do," replied the clerk.

"Good Lord, mister!" cried the boy, with a blanching face; "here's your socks." And with a bound he was out of the back door, over the fence, and away, having learned a lesson concerning all seeing eyes which it is to be hoped he may never forget.—Harper's Magazine.

A Great Battle.

Is constantly going on in the human system. The demon of impure blood strives to gain victory over the constitution, to ruin health, to drag victims to the grave. A good reliable medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla is the weapon with which to defend one's self, drive the enemy from the field, and restore peace and bodily health for many years. Try this peculiar medicine.

BEECHER'S WISDOM.

Religion and Sunday.

Religion is a very slim, lean, gaunt, poor, ill-fed thing it is ordinarily conceived of in this world.

Men sit around a tool-chest quarreling about saws and planes and chisels. They are not building anything; they are debating about tools. They are fit to be a theological seminary.

That kind of revival preaching which seeks to drive men into heaven by the fear of hell is not Christianity. It is the worst form of Paganism.

Sects are candlesticks and a man or woman that is big enough to be good for anything, is to large for any sect.

Why is it that men think it incumbent when upon them be cats and dogs in religion and gentlemen in everything outside of it?

I esteem the awfulness that is attached to Sunday, and church, and pulpit, the greatest mistake of Christendom.

The prevalent idea of keeping the Sabbath is that it is a day on which certain things must be done. To the majority of people, Sunday is a day full of nots.

I am in favor of any movement that helps anybody to appreciate Sunday as a day of rests, of healthful and pure pleasures, and that will gently lead men, women and children from the things of low estate up to the higher.

Editor-in-Chief.—Say, Scribble, what work have you got for to-night?

Scribble (a reporter)—I have several things, one is the grand concert in aid of the library fund.

Editor-in chief.—Got a program of the concert.

Scribble.—Yes, sir.

Editor.—Well, then, sit down and write your report from the program. Too busy to-night for you to go. Give 'em all a good send off. Make half a column of it if you can.

Scribble.—But I never heard any of them sing.

Editor.—That don't make any difference. Write something that'll tickle 'em all. I promised the committee a good notice.

A few extracts from the notice Scribble wrote is but a fair sample of the whole:

"Miss Birdie Warble's rendition of 'Twickenham Ferry' took the audience by storm. Her flute-like notes gave to this charming little melody a new tenderness and sweetness. Her high notes were remarkably fine and we predict for this sweet singer a great success in the lyric world."

"Mrs. St. John Screamer sang that exquisite little gem from the 'Bohemian Girl'—'I Dreamed that I Dwelt in Marble Halls.' The lady was in excellent voice and never sang better than last night. The large audience manifested its delight by continuous rounds of applause and a perfect shower of bouquets."

"One of the gems of the evening was Miss Mamie Screech's singing of that tender little song of Sullivan's 'The Lost Chord.' Miss Mamie's rich, full contralto voice is especially adapted to songs of this kind, and we have never heard this beautiful song sung in fuller, sweeter notes than it was sung last night. It brought the tears to many eyes."

"The bass solo, "Thy Sentinel am I,' by Mr. Augustus Deepnote, elicited loud and deserved applause. He has a voice of great power and rare beauty. His low notes were given in a manner indicative of rare talent, and he left the stage amid deafening applause."

The next day Scribble, whose notice had been pronounced "capital" by the editor-in-chief, went down to the office.

"Scrib," said the chief shortly, "read that, and then you kick me and I'll kick you."

"Scrib" took the copy of a rival sheet the Shouter, offered him, and dropped gasping into a chair as he read:

"The concert that was to have been given in aid of the library fund last night was postponed owing to the illness of the Misses Screech and Warble, and Mr. Augustus Deepnote's absence from the city."

"Forty thousand idiots will go ten miles out of their way to come around to this office to-day with copies of the Shouter," said the chief, "you'd better go hang yourself Scrib, and I'll take a package of 'rough on rats.'"

The Tyranny of Public Sentiment.

The Czar of Russia, Napoleon I and Irish landlords are not the only tyrants. We have them right at our hand, and one of them is called public sentiment. Given control of the columns of an influential journal, I guarantee the dethronement of the proudest name of our times. All that is necessary is to point with indignant continuity the finger of scorn or wag with devilish persistency the slanderous tongue, and the noblest man, the purest woman, can be pulled from the pedestal of fame itself and made to hide in the very gutter of despair.—Joe Howard's Letter.

A Rude Awakening.

They were on their way to the theatre, and she was tremulously happy. She felt that the words she so longed to hear would be spoken that night, and the idea made her almost dizzy with delight.

"Mr. Sampson," she said softly, "why do you wear that bit of string about your finger?"

"Oh," replied Mr. Sampson, taking it off, "that was to remind me of my engagement with you to-night."

It wasn't much, but it was enough to take away the delightful dizziness.—New York Sun.

OH! MY BACK, MY BACK!

[illegible]

A WORD WITH YOU.

[illegible] BROWN, M. D., from whose formula we have for years prepared the most successful medicine for purifying and enriching the blood, [illegible] —in short, for the speedy, safe and permanent cure of all diseases of the stomach, liver, and kidneys, that has ever been known in New England. This history, together with statements from many prominent people whom you will know, of relief secured and cures effected from sufferings and torture by these diseases, will be mailed to you if you send us your address. Better that in this letter we tell you where relief can be found. We have come late in the work with BROWN'S SARSAPARILLA. Naturally we have taken hold of the cases which other remedies, altho' advertised with persistency and at marvelous expense, have failed to cure. The results have been wonderful. Nowhere have we failed to give relief, and in no case where persistent and faithful use according to directions has been made of Brown's Sarsaparilla, has it failed to CURE any or all diseases of the blood, stomach, liver, and kidneys Mrs. Ephraim Cunningham of East Bangor, Maine, heard of it, read of it, tried it, and was cured of her weakness in kidneys and troubled liver. Carlton P. Williams of Amesbury, Mass., says he is entirely cured of what physicians diagnosticated as Bright's disease, and pronounced incurable. Eliza Morrison, of Cleveland, Ohio, advised by a friend to use Brown's Sarsaparilla for his kidney troubles, did so and was cured. Benj. Hill of New York Corner, at 63 years of age, gained strength and vitality for his blood, and health to continue his daily duties. Tumors dispersed for Reuben Severance and Aaron French by Brown's Sarsaparilla. Scrofula cured in Hartley B. Fisher, Corinna, Me. But why continue? Get our book on good health and read for yourself the astounding results secured by the use of Brown's Sarsaparilla, and remember these cases are those where eminent physicians have failed to find a remedy, and other medicines, advertise well and popularly introduced, have not benefitted, but Brown's Sarsaparilla, having been taken as a last resort, has proved efficacious and no other treatment was needed. Now with these facts in evidence, substantiated by reputable citizens accompanied by affidavits of prominent people, why not make this remedy the first, as it will then prove to you the only resort when you, your family or your neighbors are suffering from any of the almost numberless disorders which arise from a deranged stomach, and inactive liver, or weakened kidneys? Now a word in regard to the preparation and combination of this wonderful remedy. Our Mr. Warren for many years enjoyed the confidence of the late W. H. Brown, M. D., and in the prosecution of his business of pharmacist hundreds of times has he been called upon to put up the prescription, which is now compounded for popular sale, and for a few years has been known to the public as Brown's Sarsaparilla. It is entirely vegetable in its combination; the most powerful alterative-tonic properties known to the materia medica being skillfully prepared on a scientific basis, and the result of a perfect medicine for the relief and cure of dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation, biliousness, loss of appetite, inflammation of kidneys and bladder, Bright's disease, dropsy, gravel, jaundice, heartburn, rheumatism, neuralgia, scrofula, erysipelas, salt rheum, diabetes; for the removal of impurities of the blood; to incite to proper activity the sluggish torpid liver; and to strengthen and relieve disorders of the stomach. It also acts like a charm as a remedy for all female complaints. Brown's Sarsaparilla has such curative powers and is of such immeasurable value to sufferers that we have decided to commence the publication of a series of extensive articles, detailing its properties uses and cures; and hereafter you can receive such information from the columns of this paper. You can obtain the medicine of any dealer. Yours truly, ARA WARREN & CO.

JAS. R. FAIRGRIEVE - EDITOR

THE fire last Sunday morning again showed the vital necessity of fire hydrants for the use of firemen. Three hose carts clustered about a hydrant which they did not have the privilege of using, while a residence was fast being consumed, household goods, furniture, and property, some of which had been in a family for over fifty years and was prized a hundred fold beyond its intrinsic value, were being devoured and the flames threatening distruction to neighboring houses, was the sight that presented itself at the fire Sunday morning. Further the hose house of Sharp Hose company is within two blocks of where the fire occurred. We have it from the lips of N. H. Gilbert, for twenty-five years a fireman and for a number of years Chief of the Department, from Prof. Clapp and from Mr. Whitman, all men of judgment and the first at the fire, that could this hose cart have been taken from the barn and attached to the hydrant corner of Rochester and Fourth streets, when they first appeared the fire, in their judgment, could have been extinguished with comparatively small damage to the building.

It is high time that our village board took some action in regard to the use of hydrants for fire purposes, to endeavor to come to some agreement with the water works company. We understand that the company are willing to give the matter to a committee of arbitrators, two appointed by the board and one by themselves, who shall decide as to the price the village should pay for hydrants, their decision to be final. If such is the case, the board of trustees, as persons placed in power by the citizens of this village to look after the interests of the village, are not fulfilling their obligations unless they give this matter their earnest and careful attention.

A NUISMATIC COLLECTION.

William Fairgrieve, of this city, has in his possession one of the largest and most varied private collections of coins it has ever been our good fortune to behold. The St. Andrew's Bay Swindle.

A large number of people including many operatives in the factory invested money in land through the so-called St Andrew's bay land company. As has been previously stated this company is a fraud. The Tallahassaen printed in Tallahassa, Fla., recently published the following:

St Andrew's Bay swindlers, of Cincinnati, have been caught at last in the meshes of the law. One of the principals in the concern, a man by the name of Dees, has been indicted by the United States grand jury for using the mails for swindling purposes. His arrest and conviction was made after a long and tedious investigation by the government as to the methods, character and business transacted by the man, and not until one of the leading secret service officers came to Florida and looked the whole matter over in different lights was the [illegible] made. He found, so he reports, [illegible] lots were sold and resold until as [illegible] as ten owners for one piece of property could be found. False deeds were [illegible], and numberless letters were [illegible] that were never answered but [illegible]. Over $50,000 in five months [illegible] by the company, and [illegible] by them would cover an [illegible]

The sessions of the United States Commission which [illegible] to investigate the affairs of the Union Pacific Railroad management are replete with interest. The personnel of the Commission consists of Ex-Gov. Pattison of Pennsylvania, E. Ellery Anderson, a prominent lawyer and Democratic leader of this city and David Little of Illinois.

They have a duty to perform that few men would care to undertake. In brief, it is to discover the financial methods of Gould, Sage, Huntington & Co. To the most superficial observer, it must be apparent that these gentlemen composing this commission of investigation mean business; and it is equally patent to the same observer that those needing this examination are as fully determined to tell as little as possible. Both Gov. Pattison and Mr. Anderson are acute observers, trained questioners and successful financiers. If they fail to unearth the causes that have prevented the Government receiving its first due t will be due to the moral delinquincies that so very frequently appertain to the deals of Wall street.

The story as told of one day last week was something like this: A rival line to the Union Pacific whose stock had but a small value in the market and which was held by the same directory as the Union Pacific is suddenly delivered over to the latter company at a value not far from par. The money thus paid for it was justly due the Government, but on the plea that the new line was needed as a feeder to the U. P. this action was winked at. The profits of this transaction to Sage, Gould, Dillon & Co. were upwards of three millions.

Some of these gentlemen whose names appear in Wall street as the possessors and managers of large financial interests seem to think this Commission have no right to inquire into their connection with the Union Pacific. Some of the Gould clique hardly treat the Commission with courtesy. Mr. Sage in his testimony is noticeable for the bruequeness of his replies. Yet Sage was not always the big moneyed man he is now. Thirty or more years ago he was a liquor dealer in Troy and ran an establishment on River street. There are plenty of elderly farmers in the outlying country about Troy who knew him well in those days. His first venture in railroads was back in the 50's when he bought at auction the old Troy and Schenectady R. R. for $25,000 and sold it to the N. Y. C. R. R. at an advance of $30,000. He has been a dealer in puts and calls for a score of years and is credited with a narrow mind and a half dozen millions. He was the trustee of Union Pacific's rival road. The Gould crowd reckoned rightly their man when they made the deal.

Mr. Gould is yet to be examined. The testimony of Mr. Gould's partners is that he is a very quiet man. But there is a hope that this Commission will find out completely his share in this disgraceful Government swindle.

Society these spring days has but little to interest it. For that reason these shows at the Madison Square Garden have been godsends. Last week the dog show and this week the cattle show. These cattle shows in the proportions which this one assumed are new things here and there is a probability that each recurring spring will witness a similar exhibition. Society took it under its supervision. A real, genuine, live ex-General had the thing under charge and the prominent society leaders were in the management; so that everything went with an aristocratic rush. Holsteins, Jersey, Ayrshire, Hereford, Swiss, Short Horn and Devons were the breeds on exhibition. Milk tests, butter tests, dairy maids, good milk, bad milk, skim milk, butter of all grades except oleo, cheese in profusion—all these and much more were the attractions. Sixty-five pounds was the highest milk record for 24 hours while 2½ pounds of butter registered the best butter record for the same period.

While the cattle show has been in progress we have had visits from real, genuine royalty. The presence of Prince Leopold under an assumed name is, of course, an event but that does not compare with the visit of Queen Kapiolani who is now doing this city. The Queen is a portly woman who has seen a respectable number of summers come and go. Her features are very regular and the complexion is of a somewhat dusky hue. Of course she is not a negro, and those notices of the metropolitan press in which her name is coupled with the denizens of Thompson street are not in good taste,

Just how society will receive her is a conundrum which the writer can not solve. The city authorities have made suitable preparations as becomes the station of the visitor. The stay here terminates next Saturday, so that the time will be spent in visiting the places of interest in and about the city.

I have just seen a copy of Joe Howard's Life of Beecher. Howard is one of the best known journalists of this city. His father was one of the original founders of Plymouth church, and it was he who was most anxious for Beecher to come to Brooklyn. There was always a warm friendship between the two families, hence nobody is better fitted than Howard to write what everyone wants to know about—the home life of the great divine. Howard tells the story of Beecher's life in a pleasant conversational manner that is attractive. The great peculiarities of the man are brought out, while there is an abundance of incident and anecdote to make the book intensely interesting. Much, very much new matter is given that gives stronger light upon a charming life. Howard himself is not young by any means. He is a man of short stout figure, pleasant face, remarkably so; a pair of kindly eyes that sparkle behind gold rimmed spectacles. His mustache, [illegible] and what little fringe of hair his cranium has are as white as snow. His [illegible]

[illegible] he made he saved. [illegible] abstemious, but not miserly [illegible] became a figure in Wall Street. Good paying securities he sought for eagerly and no one knew better than he when to rapidly and successfully invest.

There are many men here equally peculiar whom death brings into public notice. Thus it was with Paine whose miserly habits made him an object of disgust to his friends. The recent will contest exhibited his disgusting habits to the public as well as his great ability in music criticism. Few people who passed him by in disgust suspected him to be a wealthy man. His best friend Chas. Chickering of piano fame, never knew his wealth till on Paine's death he opened a package in his safe held in trust for Paine to find a half million dollars.

Present enjoyment with moderate competence for future old age seems wisest to the WANDERER.

THE DAIRY SHOW.

Large Exhibition of Dairy Cattle and Dairy Products—Lady Fay Wins in the Milk Producing Contest.

[Special to THE TIMES]

NEW YORK, May 16.

The great dairy show at the Madison Square Garden, which closed Saturday night at 11 o'clock having lasted five days has been one of unusual interest to many city people. The exhibition of dairy cattle and daily products exclusively has proved particularly attractive as no less than 40,000 people paying fifty cents admission have visited the fair. Of this number by far the larger proportion were city people many of whom looked for the first upon such a gathering of pure-blooded Jerseys, Alderneys, Guernseys, Holsteins and other standard breeds for which some of the American dairy farms have now become famous. But the country was also largely represented. The reduced railroad rates over nearly all the lines out of New York brought here great numbers of farmers and stock breeders, with many highly cultivated dairymen. Besides, there were representatives of nearly every known device for milking cows, raising cream, churning milk and cream into butter. It is simply wonderful to see the advance made in dairy implements and machinery and to witness the sight, novel to most visitors, of a working dairy in full operation.

The cows themselves were the principal attraction. The were divided into into four milk classes, Jerseys, Ayrshires, Guernseys and Holsteins, the former equaling in number all the rest, while the latter had the advantage in point of novelty. So large a collection of these big, stolid, richly marked Dutch cattle had never been seen before in New York. They attracted from the first much attention, and their several owners were very happy in their introduction of them to the judges as well as the visitors. The fawn-colored Jerseys, however, seemed to be the popular favorites, Their softness of color and gracefulness of outline placed them among the daintiest and most lovable of pets. The Guernseys are a trifle larger, with a deeper color and if possible more gentle than the Jerseys. The Ayrshires are the plebians of the four different breeds; they look rougher and tawnier with homely shaped heads and horns. The value of some of these cattle was enormous and the prices asked most fabulous. As high as $35,000 was named for some imported stock. Large numbers of cows were valued at one thousand and fifteen hundred dollars. This was a prize show with cash premiums for a dozen different classes of cattle, also for best butter and cheese. In your adjoining county of Onondaga, owned the Lake Side farm, owned by Smiths, Powell & Lamb carried off the sweepstakes prize in Holsteins, Lady Fay taking first prize for greatest quantity of milk produced in twenty-four hours, 65 pounds and 13½ ounces, beating two other Holsteins less than two pounds apiece. This prize was $300. She also won 1st prize over all, $150. The other numerous prizes we will omit for lack of space, only giving first prize on cheese, awarded to V. W. Schooley. Butter prizes went to Vt., N. H., Ohio, Mass. and Ct.

On the whole it was pronounced a complete success and must prove of lasting benefit to those who went to get instruction. No expense was spared to have the best of everything pertaining to the manufacture of cheese and butter and of the best manner of raising blooded milch cattle and which breed will produce the most butter or cheese.

Parish.

The teachers institute held here the past week was a grand success. There were 110 teachers registered. A few were detained on account of sickness. Prof. Barnes was the conductor, and did his work admirably. Dr. Hoose of Cortland Normal School was with us part of the time, and gave us one lecture on Tuesday evening. Prof. Barnes lectured on Wednesday evening and Rev. E. H. Kinyon on Thursday evening. Prof. Robb of Phœnix, Prof. Bell of Cleveland and Prof. Bugbee of Parish, were also instructors. Miss Starkover, teacher in the primary department at Parish, had her class in geography present, and they did some excellent moulding in sand and the whole institute was well pleased. Some who were present and were well acquainted with teachers in this state said that the teachers in this commissioners district must rank among the first-class in the state. It was also remarked they were the best looking class of teachers they ever saw assembled together.

The chief event of the re-union of the Army of the Cumberland was the unveiling of the bronze statute of Garfield, erected by his old comrades in arms. The ceremonies took place on Thursday. The day was one of May's most perfect specimens, the crowd in attendance very large, and every detail of the program successfully carried out. The three surviving of the five commanders who succeeded one another at the head of the Army of the Cumberland were present—Gens. Sherman, Buell and Rosecranz, and rode in a carriage together in the parade with Gen. Sheridan, the president of the society of the Army of the Cumberland.

The pyrorama, which is to be one of the attractions arranged by the managing committee for Drill week, is being erected on the Drill ground. It requires a frontage of about nine hundred feet, and it will be shown only of nights. It will represent the naval battle in Hampton Roads which ended with the memorable contest between the Monitor and the Merrimac. Unlike a panorama the iron-clads will be real vessels, made according to the originals, and will be seen moving about, the perspective being such that they appear to be of full size.

The illusion is such that the spectator will appear to be standing on the shore of Hampton Roads. He sees the water stretching out before him, a lighthouse with a revolving light is introduced for picturesque effect, and in the distance is Fortress Monroe and a number of vessels of the federal fleet anchored near by. The drama opens by the appearance of the Cumberland, which comes in under full sail and drops anchor.

The Merrimac then appears and the work of destruction begins, ending in the battle between the Merrimac and the Monitor in which the former is burned. The vessels are worked by screws and several men seem to get badly burned in the scrimmage. The guns are made of thin iron-plates but they have collars at the muzzles which make them look thick and solid. Apparently red-hot shell and shot are fired, which, when they strike the side of a vessel, expode and make a brilliant show. During each exhibition 3,500 such bombs are fired, other vessels are bunred and the thrilling scenes in Hampton Roads are vividly portrayed.

One of the sins of the last Congress, due either to cheese-paring or to the blunders of the rush of a closing session, was the failure to make provision for the lighting the Washington Monument and running the elevator. As a result only people who are bold and strong enough to grope to the top with candles can enjoy the wonderful view from its summit. Thieves protected by the darkness have chipped and marred the ornamental stones within, and now owing to this vandalism, and the failure of Congress to provide the means of protection, the monument will be closed to visitor entirely. The watch force is inadequate to prevent depredations by relic-seekers and others who deface the memorial stones simply through depravity of nature. The marble has been chipped in many places, while the silver ornamentation on the Nevada stone has been mutilated, and the bronze letters on the Swiss tablet have many of them actually been forced off and carried away as mementoes. During the National Drill it is intended to open the shaft to visitors, provided the Drill committee will furnish a watch force sufficient for its protection.

THE ST. NICHOLAS.

The June St. Nicholas has a charming frontis piece drawn by Frank Russell Green, entitled "A Day Dream" followed by a pretty ode to June The ninth paper, King London, G. F. R. Stocton fully illustrated, is full of useful knowledge, written in a manner to engage the attention. The serial stories, "Winning a Commission" and "Jenney's Boarding House," are continued. C. F. Holder writes of "Animal Invaders," the worst of these is the "grass hopper" which comes in such armies as to darken the sun, leaving no green thing in their track, another dreaded scorge is the army worm, and is only equaled by the white ant. In South America the butterfly is sometimes equally destructive. The table of contents is full and interesting. St Nicholas is unequaled as a magazine for Young Folks.

Howard's "Life of Henry Ward Beecher" has been issued, and it fully meets the expectation which awaited it. It is a remarkably bright and interesting book, coming as it does from one of the most accomplished of journalists, and concerning as it does, one of the brightest of men.

One of its most remarkable features is that it gives an insight into Mr. Beechers own mind and heart, such as nothbut the breathing of his inmost nature to his most trusted and live-long friends could fit an author to present. With the family of the venerable Deacon Howard, (the author's father), who brought Mr. Beecher to Brooklyn, and who stood by him as a brother until his death, he kept up daily intercourse, or when absent, a voluminous correspondence. In all this he breathed into their sympathetic natures his inmost feelings, whether of trial or triumph, lofty aspiration or great endeavor, and such letters it is hardly likely can be found elsewhere on the earth. They contribute immensely to the interest and value of this book and this only, picturing the great divine as no other man can picture him to-day, These sketches, written in many moods, with the utmost frankness and freedom, and in many lands, reveal this foremost American citizen in new and unexpected lights.

Other Lives of Beecher may give a conception of him as seen by an outsider—this gives us the inner thought and character of the man.

Then again this book has been prepared as the labor of a loving heart. It is not the work of a mere biographer. We quote from the author's preface: "He was great in the pulpit and grand on the platform; but in the calm restfulness of a private life he was sweet and helpful, a balm to wounded spirits, a cheer to the despondent, a sharer in the good or ill fortune of his friends."

"That he had enemies, yes; that he had enmities, no. His enemies had their day, and it is now time for his frends to speak. As one of his friends, to whom he showed affection when a boy, whom he counselled wisely in youth, whom he aided in manhood, for whom he ever had sentiments of regard and to whom he wrote concerning the inner workings of his head and heart, I find great satisfaction in doing what little I can to perpetuate the name and continue the fame of the wisest, heartiest, simplest, greatest man I ever knew."

The author of this book has also been able from his intimate knowledge of Mr. Beecher's affairs to give us most interesting facts concerning his enormous income for forty years; also of his expenses, gifts, library, art treasures, paintings, precious stones, opinions of distinguished men, etc, etc,; matters not likely to be found in any other life that may be written.

This is in truth a unique book; most ably prepared and full of interest from first to finale. It contains a perfect portrait in steel, and many other beautiful illustrations, and in typography, paper, and binding is is a superior book, well worthy of an immense circulation.

Had Mr. Beecher attempted an autobiography he could not with premeditation, have put so much of his real nature into it as is given so spontaneously in this volume.

Cheese Market.

[From the Utica Herald].

UTICA, N. Y, May, 10.

Dairymen felt rather sore to-day at having to accept so much lower prices than last week. But buyers were evidently not inclined to take hold unless they could get stock at their own prices, and salesmen had not confidence enough to ship their cheese on commission, and preferred to sell at a lower but definite price. So the ruling was put down ⅜c., with sales of a few lots at one two and three fractions above. More than a quarter of the offering was secured on commission, all the small sizes going that way. Some of the small cheese sent last week sold at ⅜c. above the ruling.

The cause of the decline is attributable to hot weather, poor stock, and the indifference of exporters. Dealers got hit a little last week, and they want to make themselves safe if possible. At the same time they know that there is not the cheese being made now that there was a year ago. Grass was then in splendid condition and the flow of milk was large. For two or three weeks to come, our sales must fall considerably below those of last year. Factories are running ¼ to ⅓ short in their make at present.

Transactions of the day were as follows:

Lots.	Boxes.	Price
4	150	10 cents
1	50	10⅛cents
17	826	10¼cents
40	2,066	10⅜cents
8	508	10½cents
4	219	10⅝cents
1	40	11⅜cents
	1479	Com.
75	5,370

Ruling price 10⅜c. The lot at 11⅜c. was white cheese. Transactions one year ago, 5,950 boxes ruling 8c.; two years ago 5,012 boxes, ruling 8c.

AT LITTLE FALLS.

LITTLE FALLS, May 17.

Cheese.—Factorymen were a little surprised to learn of anothrr so large a drop in prices as we have had to-day, The range is just about one cent lower than last week. The offerings and sales are no larger than those of a week ago. Buyers are still quite careful in their purchases and will not take risks to any great extent, and say still lower figures will rule next week. The offerings to-day are every-day and full cream stock, mostly of the latter grade. Every day goods sold at 9@9½c. and full creams at 10@10½c. Herds are generally turned to pasture, but grass is only fair, the ground being very dry and the need of rain is shown everywhere. Following are the transactions of the day:

Farm Dairies—Sales of 558 boxes farm cheese were made, at a range in price of 9@11c. There was but one lot at 10¾c. and one at 11c., the bulk selling at 10½c.

Butter—Our butter market has dwindled to very small dimensions, only 30 packages farm dairy changing hands to-day, and the bulk of this selling to the local grocery trade. Prices are 20 and 22c., most going at 21c.

On Sunday [illegible] four o'clock fire was discovered in the house corner of [illegible] and [illegible] streets, owned by [illegible] Townsend of Washington, D. C., and occupied by Mrs. R. K. Harris, Mr. Henry Harris and Mr. and Mrs. D. K. Harris. The fire was first discovered by Henry Harris who rushed into his brother's room aroused him and then out into the yard.

His cries of fire aroused a number of the neighbors. Among the first to appear were Prof. Clapp, Messrs. J. N. Whitman, N. H. Gilbert and the Harris brothers and Mr. Whitman endeavored to extinguish the fire with pails of water, while Prof. Clapp ran to the school building and rang the bell. The fire bell soon after was rung and people began to collect in large numbers. Three hose carts with abundance of hose stood by the hydrant corner of Rochester and Fourth street waiting for the steamers while the flames were devevoring the structure and threatening destruction to the surrounding buildings. On the arrival of steamer No. 2, water was taken from the large cistern in the school yard and Mutual and Johnson hose companies both secured streams from this and saved the surrounding buildings. The cistern fortunately held out until all further danger of the fire spreading was ended. The house, barn, and shed were completely destroyed. Steamer No. 1 took water from the canal and threw a stream to the fire a distance of not less than 1,800 feet. The residences of Mrs. Kendall, Mr. James R. Loomis and Mr. F. E. Goodjon were saved. It seems impossible that they could have been had the wind been blowing in the direction of these and with the limited supply of water.

The origin of the fire is involved in mystery, Mrs. Harris was visiting in Oswego, Mr. and Mrs. D. K. Harris retired about ten o'clock, leaving a light burning for their brother. He came in about 11:30 took his lamp and went to his room. There had been no fire in the stove since noon of the preceding day. In preparing supper the evening before an oil lamp was used. The house was insured for $1,300, the barn for $150, the carriage house for $100, Mrs. Townsend's goods stored in the barn, $450. and Mrs. Harris had $1,200 on her furniture and household goods. D. K. Harris places his loss at $500 on which there was no insurance. Henry Harris lost nearly all his clothing and many other valuables, amounting to over $600. No insurance.

Seven, Seven, Seven, Eighty Seven.

During the past year a strong class feeling has risen in the Academic classes of No. 2 school. A short time ago the gentlemen of '89 challenged those '87 to a game of base ball and the challenge was accepted. Prof. Clapp kindly gave the school Friday afternoon for Field Day and the Fair Grounds was chosen as place for the contest. Interested spectators, who were not participants in in the sports, occupied the grand stand, and the following program was carried out and honors awarded to the following:

1. One hundred yards dash. 1st, Edwin Merriam; 2d, Fred Hewitt; 3d, Albert Perkins.
2. Three legged race. 1st, Homer Marsh and George Mason; 2d, Wm. Townsend and Albert Perkins; 3d, Fred Hewitt and Fred Brown.
3. Throwing base ball one chance. 1st Edwin Merriam; 2d J. H. Phillips; 3d, M. Andrews.
4. Game of base ball, '87's vs. '89's. After both sides had played five innings, the score stood 29 to 12 in favor of the '87s.
5. Running one mile foot race. 1st, Harry Howe; 2d, M. Andrews; 3d, D. Pierce.

In the early part of the evening the classes met at the tennis grounds on the park and the program was continued.

6. Running long jump. 1st, H. Butler; 2d, E. A. Merriam; 3d, W. G. Townsend.
7. Running high jump. 1st, H. Butler; 2d, Albert Perkins.

9. "Tug of War." 3 of '89's vs. 3 of 88's resulted in favor the 89's.

Later in the evening both classes were pleasantly entertained at the home of Dr. and Mrs. G. V. Emens. The young ladies of '87 and '89 provided cake and cream for victor and vanquished. The hard won ball rested upon a bed of pansies and myrtle, decked in the colors of the class of '87.

Drowned in the River.

Thomas Sullivan, a seven year old son of Timothy Sullivan, while watching a number of other boys fishing on the bank of the river a short distance above the factory last Saturday, about eleven o'clock, fell into the river and was drowned. The body was found about an hour afterwards at the head gate of the factory race. Endeavors to reuscitate the lad were without avail. A coroner's inquest was held and a verdict of accidental drowning rendered. Funeral services were held in the church of the Immaculate Conception, Monday afternoon, conducted by the Rev. Father Earley.

To Visit Fulton Soon.

Prof. O. A. Palmer, one of the most practical and scientific opticians in the country, representing the Edmundson Optical Association, of Syracuse, will visit Fulton, for one week, commencing Wednesday, May 18th, and close Tuesday night, May 24th. He will stop with the well-known jeweler, C. R. Nichols, in his new store in the Gardner block on Oneida street.

This visit is for the purpose of making scientific ocular tests of all eyes and prescribing spectacles therefor. All tests free. Among the many who use spectacles not one in twenty are properly fitted, while more than half that number should have glasses ground especially for their eyes.

Prof. Palmer is master of his profession. Astigmatism and Hypermetrophia, two dread conditions, which have baffled the skill of oculist and optician. are no longer matters of question. Where Astigmatism has so distorted vision as to cause pain in and over the eyes, extending to the back of the neck and in some cases to the small of the back, can be relieved in from three to nine days by the use of Astigmatic spectacles.

Mis-mated eyes exist, when the focus of one eye is different from the other. If this is allowed to remain uncorrected serious results may be the consequence. Let every one try each eye separately in reading and looking at distant objects, and if you find they are not alike, consult an oculist at once for you have reason for alarm.

N. B.—This is an opportunity that the citizens of Fulton have never had before. Eyes tested free by one of the best opticians in the country.

Prof. Palmer, the celebrated optician, will stop with C. R. Nichols the jeweler from May 18th to 24th. He tests eyes free. Read long advertisement. 1w2

OUR DRY GOODS STOCK

[illegible] this spring, we believe [illegible]

[illegible] and do [illegible]. The latter plan is [illegible]

[illegible] a cow, says an enthusiast, [illegible] one pound of butter from [illegible] milk! I care not for [illegible]

[illegible] smaller eggs than old hens [illegible] excessive number will make up [illegible]. But so long as eggs are [illegible] by the dozen the pullets are ahead. [illegible] chickens should never be kept [illegible] with old ones; they are apt to be injured. Have two or three yards and separate them according to size and strength.

Fannie Field warns poultry keepers against the use of sulphur in the hen house at all. She says it injures the birds and there is no good in it. Fannie ought to know.

If a dairyman turns his cows to grass an hour or two each day when they can get no more than half a bite, it will be good for them; but it may be bad for his land if it will be injured by poaching—a matter that he may decide.

The Lincolns are the largest breed of sheep in the world, having, in some instances, attained a dressed weight of nearly 400 lbs., says an exchange. They yield a beautiful fleece of lustrous wool, but acquire considerable care to be profitable.

Holstein cattle seem to be giving splendid satisfaction in all parts of the world, says an exchange. If a man wants to buy cattle for milk, butter, cheese and beef, Holsteins fill the bill, no matter where he lives, if he have feed for them.

Summing up the condition of cattle and the general outlook, a frontier journal says: For the outlook in live stock we find that we have no cause to complain, but rather cause for congratulation. The condition and general outlook for live stock to-day is fifty per cent. better than this time last year.

In planting summer vegetables, little rows of beans, peas, corn, cucumbers, radishes and beets should be put into the ground every fortnight; in this way you will have a constant success of tender vegetables.

Cows, if allowed to graze in low meadows, must have other feed besides—both grain and hay, and roots if possible, for they are likely to scour and get weak, and the milk gets a taint. Whenever turned to grass they should have other food.

Sick and bilious headache, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, cured by Dr. Pierce's "Pellets" or anti-bilious granules. 25 cents a vial. No cheap boxes to allow waste of virtues. By druggists.

Sheep Raising in Kansas.

The state of Kansas is now practically "settled." There is little pasturage to be found off one's own acres. Many of the farms are as well fenced as those of the older states and on most of them one or two hundred head of first-class sheep could be kept at nominal cost, and return as good a profit as any stock that could be kept, even at present prices of wool. The great advantage of a small flock of sheep is that without them seven-tenths of their food would be, and is, wasted each year on every 160-acre farm. It is true that all farmers cannot be successful with sheep. Every man is not "cut out" for a good flock-master, but where there is an average family of boys growing up there is generally one that will take kindly to sheep and as a rule it will be the brightest boy in the family. The diseases of sheep thus far, have all been amenable to treatment, and no heavy losses need occur. Whatever money you put into sheep, let it be in some well established breed, and you should breed for wool and mutton both, in this country and at this time. Make tight corrals, that neither dog nor wolf can get in, and guard the sheep every night. A boy and dog will easily look after interests in the day time; and not only will your ledger show a balance on the right side, but you will know that their dainty hoofs are constantly converting your farm into a miniature gold mine.—American Agriculturist.

The Farmer's Fruit Garden.

The fact that farmers are longer lived than men of other occupations is largely due to their life in the open air. They ought to have fresher and better supplies of vegetables and fruit than any other class. It would be money in their pocket in saving doctor bills if they lived up to the advantages they might easily enjoy in this respect. If the farmer will get the trees and protect them by fences, his family will generally see that they have the care requisite to make them productive. A good supply of fruit of various kinds is the very best means of making home and farm life attractive to the younger members of the farmer's family.—American Farmer.

Centenarians in Germany.

Some curious statistics have come to light at the last census in Germany, which was taken about a year ago. According to these there were at the end of 1885 no less than 72 male and 160 female centenarians in Germany. Curiously enough, no centenarians was counted in Berlin, Hohenzollern, and in Saxony, while the largest number lived in the provinces of of Posen, Silesia, and [illegible] east and west Prussia. The centenarians may numerically be divided as follows:

	100 105 Years.	105 110 Years.
[illegible]	2	3
[illegible]	10	7
[illegible]	31	16
[illegible]	11	9
[illegible]	6	3
[illegible]	[illegible]	38

[illegible] years in [illegible]

[illegible] While out driving one day with a friend he came across a farmer who was trying to "yank" a stump out of the ground with a yoke of feeble looking steers. The stump had begun to "give," but the steers strained and twisted and pulled and couldn't budge it another inch.

"What are you trying to do?" asked Joe as he stopped his horse.

"Trying to pull out this infernal stump, sir," was the reply.

"And the steers can't do it?"

"No, nor any other yoke in these parts. It'll take a pound of gunpowder to lift that stump."

"Shoo! now, but take off your cattle. I'm something on the pull myself."

"You! Say, do I look like a fool? You can drive on, stranger."

But Joe jumped down, slipped the chain off the yoke, drove the steers to one side, and then walked over to the stump and said:

"Sometimes the dirt flies over half an acre of ground. Better shade your eyes."

With that he spit on his hands, clasped his arms around the stump, and without a bulge of his eyes he lifted the whole thing out of the earth and flung it aside with the remark:

"Shouldn't like any better fun than to pull those steers backwards over the fence, but we must be going now. So 'long, old man."

And he climbed in and drove off. At a bend in the road half a mile away they looked back. The farmer stood there, mouth open and eyes as big as Bermuda onions, and when they waived their hats at him they never moved a hair. He couldn't. He was paralyzed.—Detroit Free Press.

All cases of weak and lame back, backache, rheumatism, &c., will find relief by wearing one of Carter's Smart Weed and Belladona Backache Plasters. Price 25 cents.

Geo. W. Child's Inflexible Rule.

Mr. Geo. W. Childs, proprietor of the Philadelphia Ledger, neither drinks, smokes, nor swears. Mr. Childs, as is well-known, makes it an inflexible rule never to tolerate a drunkard in his employ. A writer in the New York World tells the following story: When he bought the Ledger, in 1864, it was losing money badly. A gentleman named Coleman was city editor, and he was very naturally solicitous to keep his place. He went to see Mr. Childs next morning and said: "I understand that you have bought the Public Ledger. You and I are old friends. We come from the same town, Baltimore, and there is no reason why we should not get on." "To be frank with you," said Mr. Childs, in response to this, "I had made up my mind that you were the very first man that I should discharge." "Why?" stammered Coleman in dismay. "Because," said Mr. Childs, "you are a drunkard, and I will not have a drunkard in my employ." "What if I should reform?" said Coleman. Mr. Childs very quickly replied, "Then I will retain you and double your salary." Poor Coleman had never had such an incentive to reform as this. He caught upon the proposition. He did reform and it is through the efforts of this reclaimed city editor that the large reformatory for inebriates was established in Philadelphia. Mr. Coleman remained with Mr. Childs until a short time ago, when he was retired upon full pay.

There is no danger to human life more to be dreaded than that which arises from vitiated blood. Dyspepsia, rheumatism, headache, and general debility, all result from it, and are cured by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Take it this month. Six bottles, $5.

Wasn't Caught Napping.

"Well, Mr. Brown, how is your circulation to-day?" inquired the physician of an editor whom he had been visiting for some time.

The sick man raised his head cautiously, and asked:

"Doctor, am I very sick?"

"Oh, not so very."

"This isn't likely to be my last illness, is it?"

"Not at all; not at all."

"Fifty thousand copies daily," replied the editor, firmly, as he laid his head back on the pillow.—Merchant Traveler.

Do not despair of curing your sick-headache, when you can so easily obtain Carter's Little Liver Pills. They will effect a prompt and permanent cure. Their action is mild and natural.

Business is Business.

In a small town out West an ex-county judge is cashier of a bank.

"The check is all right, sir," he said to a stranger, "but the evidence you offer in identifying yourself as the person to whose order it is drawn is scarcely sufficient."

"I've known you to hang a man on less evidence, judge," was the stranger's response.

"Quite likely," replied the ex-judge, "but when it comes to letting go of cold cash we have to be careful."—New York Sun.

Betrayed Himself.

Pa—Yes, Bertie, how did you know?

Bertie—I didn't know, only I thought he was, for when the minister prayed for hot weather he said "Amen" awfully loud.—Tid-Bits.

She Got a new Pair.

"Won't you go up, dear, and get my goats off the bureau?"

"Your goats?" quired Jones, "what new fangled thing's that?"

I'll show you, remarked the wife, and she sailed up stairs and down again with a pair of kids on her hands.

"There they are," said she.

"Why, I call those kids," said the surprised husband.

"Oh, do you?" replied the wife. "So did I once, but they're so old now I'm ashamed to call them anything but [illegible]"

[illegible] For years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than anything else, to Regulate

my bowels. These Pills are mild in action, and do their work thoroughly. I have used them with good effect, in cases of Rheumatism, Kidney Trouble, and Dyspepsia.—G. F. Miller, Attleborough, Mass.

Ayer's Pills cured me of Stomach and Liver troubles, from which I had suffered for years. I consider them the best pills made, and would not be without them.—Morris Gates, Downsville, N. Y.

I was attacked with Bilious Fever, which was followed by Jaundice, and was so dangerously ill that my friends despaired of my recovery. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and soon regained my customary strength and vigor.—John C. Pattison, Lowell, Nebraska.

Last spring I suffered greatly from a troublesome humor on my side. In spite of every effort to cure this eruption, it increased until the flesh became entirely raw. I was troubled, at the same time, with Indigestion, and distressing pains in

The Bowels.

By the advice of a friend I began taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time I was free from pain, my food digested properly, the sores on my body commenced healing, and, in less than one month, I was cured.—Samuel D. White, Atlanta, Ga.

I have long used Ayer's Pills, in my family, and believe them to be the best pills made.—S. C. Darden, Darden, Miss.

My wife and little girl were taken with Dysentery a few days ago, and I at once began giving them small doses of Ayer's Pills, thinking I would call a doctor if the disease became any worse. In a short time the bloody discharges stopped, all pain went away, and health was restored.—Theodore Esling, Richmond, Va.

"I guess you'd better try chloroform on me," said Tompkins in the chair, to the barber who was keeping up a constant chatter.

Now I am free from all pain and soreness and am able to do my own housework. I owe my thanks to Electric Bitters for having renewed by youth, and having removed completely all disease and pain. Consumption of Spirituous Liquors.

The recently published report of the Bureau of Statistics on the consumption of liquors has a special interest at this time, when the temperance questions hold so prominent a place, in nearly every State in the Union. Comparison is made between the years 1840 and 1886. In the former year the population of the country was 17,000,000, while it is now estimated at upwards of 55,000,000. Population has thus multiplied about three-fold. In 1840 the consumption of distilled spirits was 43,000,000 gallons, and during 1886 it was 72,000,000 gallons. Thus while the population has increased more than three-fold the consumption of whisky, gin, etc., has not even doubled. But the increase in the consumption of malt liquors has been enormous, rising from only 23,000,000 in 1840 to 642,000,000 in 1886, or multiplying twenty-five fold, or eight times as fast as the population has grown. The consumption of wines has increased from less than 5,000,000 gallons to 22,000,000 gallons, or something ever four fold, and increased slightly in excess of the increase of population. The important fact is that Americans are becoming a beer drinking people. The drinking population is estimated at 15,000,000 in round numbers, and thus the average consumption of malt liquors is 172 quarts, or about a glass a day. The consumption of coffee has increased from 82 pounds to 9.11 pounds per capita.

Had Seen Him.

"I left a boy about 12 years old out here when I went in," said a farmer yesterday as he came out of the city hall.

"I saw him, sir," said a bootblack about a foot high.

"Where did he go?"

"Why, he ran out his tongue at me and the last I saw of him he was going for the woods. I don't take sass from any granger, I don't!"—Detroit Free Press.

The Odds is the Difference.

Child—"Why, that's a new book, isn't it?" Mamma—"Yes, it is a long poem called 'Paradise Lost.'" "Who is that woman in that picture?" "That is Eve, the mother of us all." "What a nice dress she has on." "That is only a rose bush she is standing behind, my dear." "Oh! I thought she was going to a party."—Omaha World.

A sallow, muddy complexion can be rendered as fresh and delicate as a peach by the use of Van Wert's Liver Pellets. If ladies would put a bottle on their dressing bureaus and take one Pellet every night for a month, they would have no further use for cosmetics.

[illegible]
Where the sparkling [illegible]
[illegible] dream of bliss deceive us,
[illegible] worn spirit never gains its goal,
[illegible] musing ever by the thought that grieves us,
Across us floods of bitter memory roll.

There is a land where every pulse is thrilling
With rapture earth's sojourners may not know,
Where heaven's repose the weary heart is stilling,
And peacefully life's time-tossed currents flow.
Far out of sight, while yet the flesh enfolds us,
Lies a fair country where our hearts abide,
And of its bliss is naught more wondrous told us
Than these few words: I shall be satisfied.

Satisfied, satisfied! The spirit's yearning
For sweet companionship with kindred minds,
The silent love that here meets no returning,
The inspiration which no language finds.

Shall they be satisfied? The soul's vague longing,
The aching void which nothing earthly fills.
Oh, what desires upon my soul are thronging
As I look upward to the heavenly hills.

Thither my weak and weary feet are tending,
Savior and Lord, with thy frail child abide;
Guide me toward home, where, all my wanderings ended,
I then shall see Thee, and be satisfied.

Which Loved Best.

"I love you, mother," said little John;
Then, forgetting his work, his cap went on,
And he was off to the garden-swing,
And left her the water and the wood to bring.

"I love you, mother," said rosy Nell;
"I love you better than tongue can tell."
Then she teased and pouted full half the day,
Till her mother rejoiced when she went to play.

"I love you, mother," said little Fan;
"To-day I'll help you all I can;
How glad I am there's no school to-day!"
So she rocked the babe till asleep it lay.

Then stepping softly, she fetched the broom,
And swept the floor and tidied the room;
Busy and happy all day was she,
Helpful and happy as child could be.

"I love you, mother," again they said,
Three little children going to bed.
How do you think that mother guessed
Which of them really loved her best?

THE JESSUP PLANTATION.

The sharp sound of a horse's hoofs ringing against the level, sun-baked road, roused Mandy Jessup from a state of hopeful abstractions, and leaning from her low seat in the door she shaded her eyes with her hands and peered anxiously out up the winding path.

A young man on a stout "cane thacky" Creole pony parted the brush and alighted without a word.

"Well, Riah?" interogated Mrs. Jessup—then as he shook his head, dejectedly, "She'ly, they ain't goin'—"

"T'aint any use wastin' ye' breath questionin' mam." Amariah interrupted, sinking into the chair his mother had just vacated, "they are goin' clean against us!"

"Well, ejaculated Mrs. Jessup, with indignation, as she hung 'Riah's hat on a nail in the whitewashed wall; well, well! an' you air old Zach Jessup's own gran' chile by his second wife—why there ain't no justis in Mississippi if the llyers can't see with one eye that it's all yourn!"

"I was kinder hopeful at fust, but soon I saw there wasn't any chance for me; Judge is all for Cunnel Jessup's claim, an' I'm no whar?"

'Riah, f'you hed a leetle change ter slip inter the jury's han' you'd get there too," insinuated Mrs. Jessup. "Laway! how you skeered me!" she shrieked, as Amariah's clinched fist came down on the table with a crash.

"Don't say any mo'! I've got no money, en if I had 'twould never go dishonestly? This little shanty is mean enough—"looking sadly around at the dirty walls and wretched furniture, "but its come by honesty!"

"You're right. 'Riah en don't fret 'bout Lizzie? There's good fish in the river as ever was caught; if she's too fine for yo' place, why, there's the Spinner gals is handy, an'—well, I never! if he ain't gone off in the heat o' the day!" as Amariah impatiently jerked his gun from the rack, and pulled his slouch hat over his eyes, hurried away from his miserable home, which resembled a chicken coop set on pegs to avoid the high water.

He pushed through the bending cane brake, crackling the fallen stocks under his feet, roughly tearing aside the poisonous red and yellow vines that clung to him, heedless of the gray moss that brushed his cheek as he passed under the water oaks, and the wild ducks that frightened by his footsteps flew up from the swamp with hoarse cries.

The ripple and the splash of water laping against the bank, roused him from his abstraction as a bend in the willows brought him close to the golden Mississippi, rushing down to death in the great seas.

Across this arm of the river lay the Jessup plantation, stretching far out into the water like the finger of a great hand and half hid by the rank growth of moss-covered trees he could catch a glimpse of the once stately home of the Jessups—now grim and deserted with its acres of untilled land lying fallow the year round.

Pausing a moment to look at the spot where his brightest dreams had been [illegible] and where now lay the grass grave of his dead hopes, the young man [illegible]. Following the narrow path on top of the high levee [illegible]

[illegible] group of these children [illegible] Jessups it was really asking [illegible] society in general to decide against them."

"Damme, sah! yo' hand on that!" energetically from the colonel. "An' you may be sho' sah, if I see him loafin' round Lizzie any mo', I'll kick him off—sot" and the irasible colonel administered a sharp rap on the judge's august shin."

"Softly, softly, Colonel!" cried that gentleman, rubbing his bruised member, "don't do anything to rouse the young lady's auger—I am afraid I have already offended her in some way."

"Hang it, no sah! she is jes' like all girls—develish skitish when a man's round! she ought to respect a gentlemen that has saved a piece of property like that for her ole dad an' damme if I think she cares a picayune! Anyhow, she's yours by to-morrow evenin' as soon as that place is put pintedly in my possession," and Colonel Jessup waving a tiresome discussion, leaned back with closed eyes enjoying his new-found property.

The Judge also indulged in pleasant meditations, occasionally taking a sip from the glass at his side as he mused upon Lizzie's tempting red lips and glowing eyes.

"Evenin' Cunnel! Evenin' Judge!"

Both men started from their revelies, and looking, saw Amariah standing before them.

The colonel's face was purple with anger and astonishment, while a sardonic grin spread across the lawyer's thin features.

"Well, 'Riah, is yo' biz'ness pressing?" asked the colonel, sarcastically, as he straightened his rotund figure. Amariah looked from one to the other's unsympathetic face and his own flushed painfully.

"My biz'ness is mo' private than pressin' Cunnel, he answered, with dignity, after a pause.

"Well, you couldn't be mo' private than with me an' Jedge Gray."

"My bizness has nothing to do with Judge Gray; it's about—Lizzie!" he jerked forth with so visible an effort, that great drops of perspiration stood out on his forehead, which he nervously wiped away with a large plaid handkerchief.

"Oh, as to that—if it's 'bout Lizzie," chuckled the colonel with a knowing wink at the judge, Jedge Gray has a half interest there, too—mind Jedge I've only said half to day!"

Amariah's limbs were stiff and tired, but he would not sit down uninvited, and now an angry gleam shot from his dark eyes:

"I see you are very sho' of my gran'father's place, Cunnel, an' much joy may you have—for whatever is come by honestly is boun' to be enjoyed."

"Humph!" growled the colonel; "who told you to come here with your impudent knowin' talk?"

"A very Solon," giggled the judge.

The young man felt that he was not pushing his suit with policy, but his blood was decidedly up.

"You may sneer, Jedge, an' you, Cunnel, may laugh, but as sho' as thar's a God in heaven, that plantation is mine an' but for kinks an' law terms that us folks can't understan', thar wouldn't a' been any suit 'tween my father an' you! As for Lizzie—I love her, an' she—she keers for me; but so long as I have only a po' shelter sich as mine to offer her, I ain't fit to kiss the groun' she walks on! God will help me through—I feel it—an' I warn you, the Jessup plantation'll never be yours!"

"What!" yelled the colonel, springing from his chair and glaring suspiciously at the two men.

"What!" I tell you, you lyin' raskill, that I'm as sartin of that plantation as I am of—the—the—the—jedge's honesty!" laying heavy hand threateningly on the judge's shoulder.

"An' to show you how sartin I am I promise you that if to-morrow evenin' that plantation ain't in my possession you can have Lizzie, an'—half my place to boot!"

"Softly, colonel," expostulated the judge.

"Yes, I mean it!" cried the excited colonel; "you know, jedge, I put my trust on you; no half-way measures suits me, an' you see I am mighty sho' of you, 'cause I never break my work."

"Well, I have yo' word, cunnel," said Amariah, calmly, "an' the jedge is my witness;" then before either could speak he had vanished among the lengthening shadows.

The moon was at its full when Amariah shut and fastened the door of his little room in the old stable, and so bright and soft was the light that she gave that he smothered the feeble flame of his candle till it flickered and went out; then groping around on his knees, he found a plank very loose at one end and running his hand along the edge drew out a small leather bag and emptied its contents on the floor—two gold eagles and a handful of silver, the savings of his life. It had seemed a great deal of money to Riah, but now it realized how little it would buy.

"It ain't much," he muttered, "but it might do a good deal. If somebody could get at them law papers—if they could be taken—then—then—then. No, no," he cried, burying his face in his hands. "Things come by dishonesty don't do any good. It ain't in me. I can't do it no' how."

[illegible]

[illegible] Amariah stood looking, it seemed to him that the tall willows bent all their heads almost touched the river; a low rumbling smote his ears, the willows bent lower and with a crash sank into the river; the gray old house tottered and trembled and with a hoarse rattle of wood and stones, was devoured by the greedy waters.

"My God, the plantation's caving off!" Amariah gasped, as he dashed into the woodland path to the hill, Jessups shouting as he came nearer:

"Bring man—men! the plantation's caving!"

He roused the hands, who came running to the point of land and worked with all their might to save the old cotton gin and its valuable machinery. Amariah gave orders and lent himself willingly to the almost hopeless task, while Colonel Jessup sat stock still in his chair holding Lizzie's hand tight in his own clumsy fingers. In an hour the Jessup plantation had vanished from earth like a specter, and nothing was left to tell of it but a mass of trees and planks whirling down to the sea.

"Riah," called the colonel faintly, "you've worked for me this mornin' like my own son, but even nature was against me. I'm wore out with lawsuits. Take Lizzie if you like an' help ten' this place. Seems to me I'm gettin' ole all of a sudden," with a tremulous smile, taking Lizzie's hand and placing it in Amariah's warm clasp. After a moment's silence, during which he seemed almost asleep, Colonel Jessup half rose from his chair, gazed with startled eyes at the seething river where once had been his very thought, then with a low moan he fell back lifeless in Amariah's arms.

The river had taken from him the hope that made the old man's heart beat, and now it lay at rest forever.—Boston Globe.

MRS. DOLLINGER'S CALLER.

Another Shrewd Scheme of the Mean, Deceitful Book Agent.

Mrs. Dollinger, a Sioux Falls lady, who lives on Twelfth street, heard a rap on the front door the other afternoon and responded to find a very distinguished-looking gentleman, extremely handsome and dignified.

"Ah! Mrs. Dollinger, I believe," he said.

"Yes, sir."

"My name is Harcourt. I live at Huron. Mrs. Scott of that place is your sister, is she not?"

"Yes, sir."

"Ah, yes, I am very well acquainted with her. She requested me to call and do a little errand for her."

"Oh, yes; won't you step in, Mr. Harcourt."

"Thank you, I believe I will. Very fine weather we're having."

"Yes, sir. Take the easy chair."

"Thank you; pray don't put yourself to any trouble on my account."

"Certainly not. Was m ysister well?"

"Quite well, I am pleased to say. By the way, Mrs. Dollinger, I have a little work here which I would like to show, as I am sure you would be interested in it. It is called 'Daniel in the Lion's Den,' and is by the Rev. Thomas R. Deuteronomy, and it comes in twelve parts exquisitely bound in cloth, leather or extra Russia, is finely illustrated, and should be in every library, and I am taking hundreds of orders, as you can see by examining this order book, and everybody is wild over it, and all pronounce it the most wonderful book written since the Holy Scriptures. It treats of Daniel in ten stages, when he started to go into the den, when he got a little further in, when he got clear in, when the lions came up to examine him, while they were making their survey, while they retired to consult together, when they decided a post-mortem would be necessary, when they announced the result to Daniel, when he convinced them that he should not consent to an autopsy, when the lions retired and Daniel got out embellished with numerous cuts, plans, maps, and beauti. steel engravings, comes at $1 a part or $12 for entire work, put your name down here and pay as you receive each part, eleven parts now ready—here is a fountain pen, write under Mr. Brown's name at the bottom of the page."

"Mr. Harcourt," said Mrs. Dollinger, rising and suppressing her tears, "you're a mean, deceitful book agent! Get out of my house!"

"I know, but just sign——"

"Go on, or I shall scream!"

"Certainly, certainly, if you insist; no offense. But can you tell me the name of the lady next door, and where some of her family live? Ah, you won't, eh? I'll work another scheme, then. Good day, Mrs. Dollinger, good day; glad to have made your acquaintance.—Dakota Bell.

A WORD WITH YOU.

[illegible] We have come late to the work with BROWN'S SARSAPARILLA. Naturally we have taken hold of the cases which other remedies, altho' advertised with persistency and at marvelous expense, have failed to cure. The results have been wonderful. Nowhere have we failed to give relief, and in no case where persistent and faithful use according to directions has been made of Brown's Sarsaparilla, has it failed to CURE any or all diseases of the blood, stomach, liver, and kidneys. Mrs. Ephraim Cunningham of East Bangor, Maine, heard of it, read of it, tried it, and was cured of her weakness in kidneys and troubled liver. Carlton P. Williams of Amesbury, Mass., says he is entirely cured of what physicians diagnosticated as Bright's disease, and pronounced incurable. Eben Morrison of Cleveland, Ohio, advised by a friend to use Brown's Sarsaparilly for his kidney troubles, did so and was cured. Benj. Hill of New York Corner, at 63 years of age, gained strength and vitality for his blood, and health to continue his daily duties. Tumors dispersed for Reuben Severance and Aaron French by Brown's Sarsaparilla. Scrofula cured in Hartley B. Fisher, Coriana, Me. But why continue? Get our book on good health and read for yourself the astounding results secured by the use of Brown's Sarsaparilla, and remember these cases are those where eminent physicians have failed to find a remedy, and other medicines, advertise well and popularly introduced, have not benefitted, but Brown's Sarsaparilla, having been taken as a last resort, has proved efficacious and no other treatment was needed. Now with these facts in evidence, substantiated by reputable citizens accompanied by affidavits of prominent people, why not make this remedy the first, as it will then prove to you the only resort when you, your family or your neighbors are suffering from any of the almost numberless disorders which arise from a deranged stomach, and inactive liver, or weakened kidneys? Now a word in regard to the preparation and combination of this wonderful remedy. Our Mr. Warren for many years enjoyed the confidence of the late W. H. Brown, M. D., and in the prosecution of his business of pharmacist hundreds of times has he been called upon to put up the prescription, which is now compounded for popular sale, and for a few years has been known to the public as Brown's Sarsaparilla. It is entirely vegetable in its combination; the most powerful alterative-tonic properties known to the materia medica being skilfully prepared on a scientific basis, and the result of a perfect medicine for the relief and cure of dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation, biliousness, loss of appetite, inflammation of kidneys and bladder, Bright's disease, dropsy, gravel, jaundice, heartburn, rheumatism, neuralgia, scrofula, erysipelas, salt rheum, diabetes; for the removal of impurities of the blood; to incite to proper activity the sluggish torpid liver; and to strengthen and relieve disorders of the stomach. It also acts like a charm as a remedy for all female complaints. Brown's Sarsaparilla has such curative powers and is of such immeasurable value to sufferers that we have decided to commence the publication of a series of extensive articles, detailing its properties uses and cures; and hereafter you can receive such information from the columns of this paper. You can obtain the medicine of any dealer. Yours truly, ARA WARREN & CO.

JAS. R. FAIRGRIEVE - EDITOR

THE last issue of the Patriot lampoons THE TIMES in an article one column in length, for daring to give a few facts that were clearly shown at the recent fire on Fourth street. Not satisfied with this our esteemed contemporary satirizes the Standard correspondent, abuses ex-Chief Gilbert for deigning to give his views, ignores the statements of Prof. Clapp and Mr. Whitman, vents its spite on the proprietor of THE TIMES and intimates that members of the water works company rejoiced that an occasion had come which would prove an unanswerable argument in favor of water works.

This avalanche of sarcasm and abuse, which the Patriot belched forth, the editor doubtless thought was enough to destroy any reputation for honesty, probity or reason that any of the persons attacked might previously have had, but it lacked two essential elements i. e. accuracy and conciseness. The inaccuracy and misstatements were so numerous and evident that the article became ludicrous; the sarcasm and innuendos were so abundant and thickly spread that they fell flat.

The Patriot states that we slur and sneer at the hose companies when we say that three of their carts were clustered about a hydrant. As the hydrant is only about twenty feet from the cistern where it was necessary for the steamer to take water, it was the proper place for them to be and they showed good judgment in taking that position.

We might also state for the edification of the Patriot that no wrenches were available by which the hydrant could be opened. Had there been, we venture to say that it would have been used.

THE TIMES is working for what it conders right on the question. For our own part we see the need of a system of water works for fire purposes. If such a system were not here, we would use our influence to get one. Such a system being here, we shall use our influence to secure it for fire purposes as long as the Water Works company show a disposition to do the fair thing by the village. We consider hydrants of as much use to a village the size of Fulton as an overcoat is to a man in winter. Some men do without overcoats and some villages do without fire hyerants. We think it advisable for men to have coats and villages to have hydrants, if they can be obtained.

THE Whitehall Times, one of the brightest and liveliest of our exchanges, has just moved into a new building which has been erected and is starting on a new era of usefulness. Our congratulations are extended to The Times on this indication of its prosperity and to Editor Wilkins for the enviable rank he has acquired in journalism.

WE have before us a copy of the North China Herald and Supreme Court & Consular Gazette published at Shanghai. It contains the account of a judicial suit in the U. S. Consular Court before Gen. Kennedy, Consul General. Mr. W. S. Emens, nephew of Dr. G. V. Emens, and a native of this village, appears as defendant in the suit, he being administrator of an estate against which a claim of $8,050 with interest was made by the plaintiffs. The case was decided in favor of Mr. Emens, who acted as his own lawyer in the case.

Gloomy Outlook in the Hop District.

A gloomy feeling prevades the hop districts of central New York. Two years ago the grower hardly realized enough from his hops to pay the cost of picking. Those who profited materially were those who were able to hold their product for the better price, which came a year later.

Our Wealthy Men.

Much has been said in newspapers of men who have made large fortunes in comparatively a few years in various business industries. Many of these articles are written by correspondents of prominent newspapers, and copied into others of lesser note. Correspondents generally are seldom men of business qualifications and wrongfully picture these men and their business as a thing of accident; this is not the case with those we have met. We find that where men have made large fortunes by their own business talent and industry they chose with sagacity and forethought such businesses as would lead to success when handled with judgment. No man has been brought before the public as an example of success, both in wealth and magnitude of his business (outside of stock and railroad men) more prominently than Dr. G. G. Green of Woodbury, N. J. He is at the head of many large business industries, and yet comparatively a young man. When the fact that August Flower, for dyspepsia and liver complaint and Boschee's German Syrup, for coughs and lung troubles, has grown to a wonderful sale in all parts of the world, it proves that it was not an accident or spontaneous strike at wealth. His medicines are recognized as valuable and established remedies and the business has grown gradually and permanently during the last eighteen years on account not alone of Dr. Green's abilities as a business man or his "good luck," but on the actual merits of the two preparations.—Copied from the N. Y. Weekly Sun, of Dec. 22, 1886.

An Absurd Feature of the Life Insurance Tax Bill.

One of the most absurd features of the bill taxing Life Insurance companies is that if enforced now—after seven years of abeyance—the present policy-holders will be compelled to pay not only their share of the tax, but the portion that should have fallen upon the policy-holders who have retired, or whose claims have been paid. This is a manifest injustice and one which the Legislature appreciated without considering the inadvisability of the tax in general. The Governor of the State will no doubt regard this point, and 300,000 policy-holders in this State look to him to ratify the good work of the senate and assembly.

Every one who reads a newspaper becomes familiar with the business houses whose names appear in it, and naturally they go themselves and send others to the places they know about, instead of hunting up others they never heard of. Merchants who advertise make many friends through the columns of a newspaper, as their names become familiar household words; those, on the contrary, who depend on casual customers who pass their doors, generally get left.—[Ex.

[illegible] communication from Rome. [illegible] adherent to the deposed pastor's cause and every address to the Archbishop is followed by some fresh and startling statement from the rebellious priest. Dr. McGlynn has in no sense retired from the position he has taken in protesting his adherence to his church, or in the advocacy of the doctrines of his friend Henry George. The latest movement he has made is the formation of a new society called the Anti-Poverty Society. By him it is to be a union of all creeds under the banner of "Taxes on Land Values Only," and this is to work out the grave and perplexing economic problems of the day. Occasionally Dr. McGlynn gives utterance to some remarkable statements. Thus on Thursday evening at a meeting for protest against the recent Russian treaty he said among other things that while he did not intend to defend the man who assasinated the Czar, yet he would do honor to that man who felt in his heart to kill the Czar. A rather strange statement coming from so eminent and pure a clergyman. The latest phaze in his trouble with the Vatican comes in a recent letter from the Pope in which the course of the Archbishop of this city is approved and a warning comes to the late pastor of St. Stephen's to repair to Rome in forty days under penalty of summary expulsion. This letter is variously viewed. By some it is regarded as a sop to the Archbishop in order that his wounded feelings may be properly bound up. By Dr. McGlynn it is partly so construed. The main idea for which the Dr. contends is this: That for his individual action outside his church he is not accountable. What he preaches from the altar, that alone must be his condemnation. Having preached nothing from the altar at variance with his church doctrines, he desires first reinstatement before he goes to Rome. The end of things is not yet. No one can predict what the final result will be. This fact is true, a hint of which I have before given, that so thoroughly aroused is the Catholic populace on this subject that church collections have fallen off to a considerable extent in many parishes and when this matter is finally settled St. Stephens will be much more deeply in debt.

The new law making that part of Saturday after 12 o'clock a legal holiday is not meeting with as much success as its originators hoped. The measure was a pet one with the clerks and salesmen of this city. The agitation upon the matter began three or four years ago. Closing after 12 o'clock on Saturday during the months of July and August was quite generally observed by the down town and Broadway business houses. This new law is designed to make this closing occur every day in the year. The movement is not pleasant to the Exchanges. The banks are compelled to observe it inasmuch as business paper due after 12 o'clock cannot be protested if not paid before Monday. So far as bank and the public municipal government offices are concerned they closed, but the stores, the retail stores in particular, did just as much business. The probability is that a strong public sentiment will be brought to bear upon business and the law will be generally observed.

Jay Gould proved a very remarkable witness and it is doubtful to say whether the Pacific Railroad Commission are any wiser now than they were before he testified. Gould is a short, slightly built man with pleasant face, low pitched voice, small well kept hands and a generally neat though inexpensive attire. His testimony before the Commission was remarkable for the strange ability to remember the facts and figures surrounding the purchase and control of more than a half-hundred roads in the West. Only dates seemed to trip him, but sums in six and seven figures were readily remembered, huge blocks of stocks and bonds, the purchase and final disposition of which were recalled and all the monetary transactions of the last two decades were told with a wonderful accuracy. Gould, so far as the story of how these roads were acquired, price paid, deals instituted and directories elected, told frankly all he knew, but the reasons, the motives, the more peculiar "combines," so to speak, he left the Commission in ignorance. An apparently frank man telling his story as if concealing nothing, anxious to help the Government, yet telling not one thing the Commission is most anxious to find out namely, why the Government does not get its due which now reaches the splendid sum of $54,000,000. Only once did Gould show any anger during his three days of testifying. He had startled the Commission with the remark that he had offered the Government $15,000,000 [illegible]

I see Lester Wallack has formally retired from active management although not from the boards. This removes the oldest actor manager in this city. His two theatres, the Star and Wallack's will from the coming season be under the management of Henry E. Abbey and John Schoeffel, the husband of Agnes Booth. Wallack has been on the boards for more than forty-five years. He has had like all others his successes and reverses. Latterly, however, he has been very successful. Wallack is a singularly handsome man and to see him on the street no one would imagine him to be sixty-five but that age he is. Abbey, the new manager used to be a dry goods clerk, but became interested in theatres, organized a company and for a dozen years has had varying success. Patti, Langtry, Bernhardt, Campanini and Emma Abbott have been under his management. He is a thoroughly versed man in his business and of late fortune has smiled upon him.

The nomination of Col. Fred Grant for Quarantine Commissioner is particularly pleasing to the people here. Col. Fred is the late General's oldest son and was born in 1850. He was interested in the firm of Grant & Ward, but on its failure there was no taint of fraud upon him. He immediately obtained a position with the New York Steam Company, wherein his professional knowledge as engineer would be of great value. Whatever debts were due to creditors of the firm he has paid. Latterly he has been looking after his mother's interest in the management of his father's book, the profits of which have so far amounted to about $400,000. Col. Fred is not often seen on the streets. The only haunt he seems to have is 5th Avenue Hotel and even there he is not seen oftener than once a week. Mrs. U. S. Grant resides in the city residence while the other boys are farmers up in Westchester county. The whole Grant family are very kindly spoken of and the efforts they make to repay all who lost by trusting to the firm of Grant & Ward through them are not forgotten.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has largely benefitted the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen, has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the [illegible] The August Flower for [illegible]

[illegible] the noted [illegible] Drill, which [illegible] of some weeks, is upon us. The drill ground is ready for the competition, the grand stand is ready for the spectators, the camp ground is ready for the soldiers, many of whom have already arrived, and by Sunday night it is expected that all of the competing companies will be quartered in and around the Washington monument.

Some companies from a distance were the first to arrive in the city, so that they might have ample time to rest from their long journey before the beginning of the contest. Among them were the Lousiana Rifles, the San Antonio Rifles, the Lomax Rifles, of Mobile, the Vicksburg Southrons, the Muscatine, Rifles of Iowa, the Belknap Rifles and others. To-morrow the Mammoth Rifles, of Ill., will reach here and on Sunday the Nealy Rifles, of St. Paul, and the Custer Guards will march into camp.

In that portion of the drill ground devoted to the Pyrorama, work is still in progress, but 'ere this letter reaches you the pyrotechnic drama representing the naval battle in Hampton Roads will been exhibited once at least and the Drill will have commenced. The mechanical arrangements for spectacle are such that when the piece is presented it will be of a very illustrative character, and everything will have a very realistic appearance.

The army of officers appointed to be judges in the various competitions of the Drill have prepared their program, but that, of course, is a sealed book at present. Each company will be ignorant of the maneuvers it will be required to perform until it enters the drill ground for competition, when it will be informed by the judges.

Since the death of Justice Woods the gossip in reference to the Supreme Court vacancy has expanded to include a long list of candidates, more than a score of names being mentioned. The oldest Supreme Judge now on the bench is Justice Miller, who was appointed in 1862. Not one of the nine has ever been a Democrat, with the possible exception of Justice Field, of California. The partisan bias of the Judges is of far less importance than it was when questions were rife which are now regarded as settled, but there is scarcely a doubt that President Cleveland will appoint a Democrat. It is said on apparently good authority, however, that he is not inclined to make the appointment from his Cabinet, circle, as was at first supposed he would, but that he will be apt to confine himself to the circuit and appoint some eminent Southern lawyer.

The President has an entertaining variety of people to call at his receptions sometimes. At a recent handshaking the first man received by Mr. Cleveland congratulated him upon the success of his administration. Then a woman who looked like a member of some good society asked him to carry her best respects to "your wife, and tell her how her every act comforts our souls." Next came a man with a small boy, whose hand he placed in that of the Chief Magistrate. He whispered something to the President who stroked the boys head in a kindly way. "He may never vote for you Mr. President, but his father did, and will again." "It is good stock," said Mr. Cleveland, as the two passed on. A tiny girl had a little speech which she tried to make to the President but he could not catch its import, although he grasped her arm and bent his head low to listen. Another little girl brought her communication in a big envelope which she thurst into the President's hand. Many people give him their cards and many announce their relationship to his former friends, but the greatest speechmakers by far are the women. With that fine sense of the unfitness of things they often take advantage too of the situation, to do serious and earnest lobbying for favors of some sort.

[illegible] companies. The only attempt ever made here to subject the earnings of [illegible] and the provision for widows and orphans to special taxation was made in 1880 and 1881, when the present system of taxing corporations for State purposes was devised. In the former year the general corporation tax law was passed, and with it an act specially taxing the premiums and income of Life Insurance companies. This act, however, was so badly drawn that in its method of taxing companies of other States, it burdened our own companies more for the benefit of other States, under their retaliatory laws, than for our own State treasury. Learning this fact, Gov. Cornell sent it back to the legislature, which, in its last hours, and without discussion, struck out all that remained to foreign companies, and passed it again.

In this form it is the most tangled mass of absurdities on any statute book. On the pretext of taxing a franchise, it takes part of the premiums paid by insurers upon their lives and exempts from all taxation the stock of the companies. The widow and orphan are made to pay a special tax, that the owners of the franchise, who invest money in the business for profit, may go free. It taxes all who insure in New York companies, while exempting all who insure in other States, thus offering a direct inducement to citizens of New York to insure in New Jersey or Massachusetts. In effect it fines any citizen of New York who has sought the protection offered by its own laws for the last forty years, and exempts any citizen who has sought such protection in other States. It proposes to diminish the amount paid for every widow's support and every orphan's education, while carefully saving for the stockholders their profits.

No argument worth notice has been offered against the repealing act. Two or three journals have appealed to the popular prejudice against corporations as justifying their opposition, and speak of valuable franchise held by their companies as proper subjects of special taxation. But the franchise which authorizes men to bear one another's burdens is one thing, and that which surrenders public property, rights of way, and the power of eminent domain for private profit, is another, and it is criminal folly to confound them. The companies already pay full taxes on all their buildings and visible property, and contribute a large share to the prosperity of the State. If there is anything in human society which ought to be sacred from the tax-gatherer, it is the funds deposited with these companies against the contingency of the death of the head of the family. The pretense that the repealing act is throwing money out of the treasury is idle. It is the relinquishment of an accidental claim, arising upon a technical construction of words, which could only be enforced, if at all, after tedious litigation, by reversing the uniform policy of the State, and to the gross oppression of an interest which that deliberate policy has always fostered.

Cheese Market.

[From the Utica Herald].

UTICA, N. Y, May, 23.

Our market was more active to-day than at any previous time this year. It was not supposed that the ruling would go above 9½c., but the competition was strong and so many sold at 9¾ to 10c., that that the others could not be bought short of 9⅝c The full compliment of buyers was out to-day for the first time, there being eleven present. Salesmen claim that their cheese is better made and better cured than it has been, and on its merits is worth more money. The dry weather is hurting pastures, and if rain does not come soon milk will begin to shrink. More or less cheese was taken to-day for western markets which absorbed the finest of the small cheese. Buyers claim that they lost money last week, and they have made an effort to get as much stock as possible on consignment. They succeeded in obtaining about one-quarter of the offerings on that basis. On the whole dairymen are very well satisfied with to-day's results, inasmuch as they are better than anticipated. Buyers are doubtful and some of them predict a ten cent market in in New York before the close of the week. Following are the transactions:

Lots.	Boxes.	Price.
5	300	9¾
4	202	9⅝
63	3,747	9¾
13	1,159	9¾
4	290	10
2	100	p. t.
90	5,797
	1,934	Com.
Total	7,731

Ruling price 9¾c. Transactions of corresponding day last year 7190 boxes; ruling price 7⅝c. Two years ago 6,326 boxes, ruling 7¾.

AT LITTLE FALLS.

LITTLE FALLS, May 23.

Cheese.—There is another decline in prices, being ½c below last week's figures. Some buyers expected the decline would be more than this, and few expected that cheese would reach ten cents. But we find six bona fide sales at ten cents, and hear rumors of more. Another feature of the market is disappointing, viz. the light sales—being 300 boxes less than a week ago, and 1,900 less than a year ago. Sales of everyday stock were made at 9¾ to 9c., and full creams at 9¾ to 10c. The exceeding dry weather was the principal topic upon the market, it being the universal complaint that grass is suffering terribly for want of rain. Sales were as follows:

The Hardegg Portraits.

Mr. W. R. Nesbitt, the well known photographer of Oswego, has on exhibition in Rosenbloom's show window a fine pastel portrait of Longfellow and at Watson's a fine crayon portrait. They are 25x30 inches and are samples of the work for which he is agent. They are as fine as we ever have had the pleasure of seeing and no one should pass by without examining them carefully as they show clearly the work of a master hand.

Mr. Nesbitt acts as general agent for Mr. Fred Hardegg, graduate of the Academy of the Academy of Design, Vienna, pupil of Bonnat, Paris, late artist to the Emperor of Brazil, Don Pedro II, and is now placing his work before the public.

Portraits in Oil, Pastel and Crayon are taken from life or from photographs and orders by mail will receive careful attention from him.

Mr. Nesbitt will be at the Lewis house a few days during each week where parties so desiring can see him personally or leave their orders. Communications can also be addressed to him at No. 196 West First street, Oswego, N. Y.

Parties who have had difficulty in getting a good portrait of themselves, by consulting with Mr. Nesbitt will be able to make arrangements by which a setting can be secured at his gallery at Oswego.

March 16, 1887. W. S. NELSON.

[illegible] were carried over Battle Island dam, the boat being broken into two parts. O'Brien and Giesler became separated as they went over the falls, the former managing in some way to reach the shore in an exhausted condition and thinking that his companion had been taken down the river by the swift current and drowned made his way to a farm house, where he was taken in and cared for. Persuaded that nothing could be done until daylight he waited while the moments dragged slowly on.

Giesler on going over the falls clung to one part of the boat and was carried down by the stream about a quarter of a mile when the boat struck a snag and became lodged, here he remained for over three hours, half frozen and in an exhausted condition. At daybreak his cries for help attracted the attention of a man in that locality who went out in a boat and rescued him. O'Brien who had started out to arouse the neighborhood soon after met him and as each supposed the other drowned the meeting was of a pleasant nature. They were brought home and now, outside of colds contracted and a few bruises are all right after their rough experience and narrow escape. Their overcoats, fishing tackle, boat and bait were lost, and Giesler's aquarium did not have any new attractions on Sunday.

Chaplain McCabe.

This gifted orator will deliver his famous lecture "Bright Side of Life in Libby Prison" on Friday evening of this week, at 8 p. m., in the M. E. church. It was expected that the Opera House could be secured, but a theatrical troupe having previously leased it for the whole week and no satisfactory arrangement having been able to be made with them, the above place has been chosen as the next most suitable building for the accommodation of the large number who will hear the Chaplain.

His lecture has been delivered in hundreds of vilages and cities all over the country, and in scores of places has been repeated several times and always with deep and thrilling interest. The chaplain is one of the most eloquent of platform speakers, full of humor and pathos, and never fails to interest his audience. He is more popular to day than ever and is in the greatest demand all over the country and is constantly refusing applications for his services. so fully occupied is his time. It was only by the personal solicitations of friends that he was finally prevailed upon to come to Fulton. No one who heard his magnificent address on Sunday evening at the M. E. conference a year ago, when he held spell bound for one and a half hours an immense audience that filled every niche of sitting or standing room in the church will miss this opportunity of hearing him again. A chaplain in the army during the war and an inmate himself of Libby Prison, he relates in a graphic and intensely interesting manner his personal experiences. The proceeds of the lecture will be devoted to the Soldier's Monument Fund, a most worthy object. The price of admission, 25cts. is made very low in order that all may attend.

OBITUARY.

On Tuesday, May 17, Mrs. Frank Wesley nee Nellie M. Royce formerly of Fulton, and daughter of Mrs. Adeline Royce, died at her home in Sing Sing, N. Y. She leaves her husband and an aged mother and brothers and sisters to mourn her loss who with many others will regret her death for she was respected and loved by all who knew her.

Nellie's life work is ended,
Her sickness all is past,
We know she's crossed the river
And is safe at home at last.

So although our loss is bitter,
And our hearts are racked with pain,
Sweet consolation whispers,
In heaven we'll meet again.

So with that bright hope we leave her,
Safe with God forever more,
Knowing she will wake up yonder
On that shining, golden shore.

The Puritan rose, the latest production of the queen of flowers, has a compact blossom, is of a delicate creamy white, and will last for days.

Fifty thousand tons of soot were taken from London chimneys last year. Its value was set at two hundred and four thousand dollars—as a fertilizer.

Deep or shallow plowing should be regulated by the depth of the soil and the character of the subsoil.

An excess of animal matter in the soil promotes the growth of wood at the expense of fruit production.

The crowding of fowls into a contracted space sadly interferes with the profits of the poultry house.

Most all farmers can afford to experiment in a measure. Experiments in many instances have led to the establishment of useful rules.

A wise farmer will protect the birds, the insect eaters, robins, cat birds, blue birds, black birds, thrushes, orioles, red birds, woodpeckers, and the like. All the birds mentioned have a mission to perform in the economy of nature. The martins destroy weevils, the quails chinch bugs, the woodpeckers dig worms from the trees, while others eat worms, caterpillars and bugs.

For Farmers to Consider.

How much land did you cultivate last year? Did it pay? Have you any idea of the cost per acre of any of your crops? Did you undertake to cultivate too many acres? Did you cut one ton of hay on three acres, or three tons on one? Were the other crops in the same ratio?

The chances are ten to one that not one farmer in fifty throughout the country can give a really satisfactory answer to these questions.

The trader who buys any of your products knows whether he makes or loses on every item of produce you bring him, and do you know whether or not you are selling at a profit or loss?

It costs you more to cultivate two acres than one. Make one acre produce all it will before you waste your labor on the second.

You must invest capital in business if you would reap a return.

Labor is capital.
Brain work is capital.
Intelligence is capital.
Manure is capital.
Seed is capital.

The best seed, in the best soil, with the best manure, containing all, and the best elements of plant life and growth is the best investment that can be made with a view of obtaining the best crop from the land, and it matters not what that crop is to be.

You take and it costs, you give and it pays.

The law of compensation cannot be violated.

You cannot draw from the bank without making deposits, unless you exhaust your capital, or your credit.

Your farm is a bank which will reward you according to your merit.—American Farmer.

Color in Cattle.

Progressive breeders are awakening to the fact that the color craze in stock breeding has been carried to absurd extremes, and if not stopped will be very detrimental to the improvements that intelligent men are laboring to bring about in our farm stock. Every stock show illustrates the ill-effects of a fashion that urged the rejection of all animals not of "solid colors," regardless of profitable excellence in respect to form, etc. A well-known short horn breeder in a talk on this subject says: "Any breeder who will select an inferior red animal to a superior of any other color libels his own character and disgraces the short horned blood whether he is aware of the fact or not."

Welsh Wisdom.

Three things of short continuance—a lady's love, a chip fire and a brook flood.

Three miseries of a man's house—a smoky chimney, a dripping roof and a scolding wife.

Three things that ought never to be from home—the cat, the chimney and the housewife.

Three essentials to a false story teller—a good memory, a bold face and fools for an audience.

Three things that are as good as the best—brown bread in famine, well water in thirst, and a gray coat in cold.

Three things that are seen in a peacock—the garb of an angel, the walk of a thief, and the voice of the devil.

Three things it is unwise to boast of—the flavor of thy ale, the beauty of thy wife, and the contents of thy purse.

Three warnings from the grave—Thou knowest what I was; thou seest what I am; remember what thou art to be.

Big Men's Private Offices.

President Norvin Green of the Western Union Company occupies a handsomely furnished big room for his office, and sits there in modest state, with a clerk or two near by.

President Chauncey M. Depew has even a larger room, all to himself in the Grand Central depot, but it is not extensively or fully furnished. He sits at a great table desk and at his left hand is a sort of short pedestal, dotted with electric call buttons bearing the names of the officers of the Central Railroad. His clerks are in other rooms and he is left alone at his work.

Found Out After Dark.

The following discoveries were made by a meek Hatboro man who got up the other night to look for a match:

The doors are nine feet in width.

The sofa stands out from the wall five feet.

Chair-rockers are eight feet three inches long.

The chandelier reaches to within two feet of the floor.

The wall advances to meet you in the centre of the room.

The table has twenty-seven legs which are placed at right angles of forty-five degrees.

And the bureau, where you had left the matches on going to bed had disappeared entirely,—Hatboro Public Spirit.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, that it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease. I have also prescribed it as a tonic, as well as an alterative, and must say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Fowler, D. D. S., M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

Dyspepsia Cured.

It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Indigestion and Headache up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians and tried a great many kinds of medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my headache disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties more perfectly. To-day my health is completely restored.—Mary Harley, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most reliable blood purifier yet discovered.—H. D. Johnson, 383 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Wanted: A Situation."

It is really most distressing
That, although my needs are pressing,
I cannot make the money that inferior fellows can;
Nor find an occupation
In this Philistinish nation,
Congenial to a college-bred and cultivated man.

My talents—they are many—
Do not bring me in a penny,
While the unenlightened vulgar go on heaping up their gains;
I can do so much that they can't,
But all "situations vacant"
Are reserved, as I discover, for the men of vacant brains.

I was noted when at college
For a very special knowledge
Of history, antiquities and numismatic lore—
But in Coinage early dated,
My interest has abated;
Some interest on our modern coin would benefit me more

In the "ologies" and "isms,"
In all theologic schisms,
In the speculative systems of both old and modern thought,
I am versed, I may say, deeply.
But my "views" I'd part with cheaply,
Could I ascertain the market where that kind of thing is bought.

I am trying legal practice,
But the melancholly fact is,
That, although I passed with honors when I took my law degree,
And did credit to my tutors,
I do not suit the suitors,
And my knowledge of fee simple does not bring a simple fee.

The thought I sometimes harbor,
That to be a chatty barber,
Conductor on a surface car or driver of a van—
To get a place as waiter,
Or run an elevator—
Are about the only chances for a cultivated man

June.

O June! delicious month of June!
When wind and birds all sing in tune;
When in the meadows swarm the bees
And hum their drowsy melodies
While pillaging the buttercup,
To store the golden honey up!
Oh June! the month of bluest skies,
Dear to the pilgrim butterflies,
Who seem gay-colored leaves astray,
Blown down the tides of amber day;
O June! the month of merry song,
Of shadow brief, of sunshine long;
All things on earth love you the best,
The bird who carols near his nest;
The wind that wakes and, singing, blows
The spicy perfume of the rose;
And bee, who sounds his muffled horn
To celebrate the dewy morn;
And even all the states above
At night are happier for love,
As if the mellow notes of mirth
Were wafted to them from the earth,
O June! such music haunts your name;
With you the summer's chorus came!
—Frank Dempster Sherman, in St. Nicholas.

THE PROPER THING.

Jet is not mourning unless it is dull.

Real lace veils with borders are revived for lace bonnets.

A little jet is necessary on every black toilet that is not mourning.

Mousseline, delane, and challies will be much worn this summer.

For the summer dresses ladies of middle age and past like the silk grenadines.

Yellow is the dash of bright color in millinery and accessories of the toilet.

Black silk dresses for elderly ladies are of repped silk, faille francaise or Bengaline.

Cashmere dresses are made with a polonaise over a plain skirt of watered silk.

Cottage-shaped bonnets of smooth Milan or of lace like straw are made for elderly ladies.

Full, straight skirts in wide pleats and long, ample draperies are liked for the stately gowns of mature woman.

Gray is the fashionable color at present, particularly the light shades, which tone well with steel passementerie.

The apron is gradually disappearing in favor of the long overskirt, the sides are left plain, and the back is made full.

Navy blue, when not too purple, is worn by those with gray hair, and pale, blue ribbons on lace caps are very becoming to silver-haired blondes.

Handsome purses chrocheted in silk, with or without beads, are coming into favor, but the portemonnaie holds its place among sensible practical women.

Long, straight, full breadths, not bunched up at the top, and forming the entire back of the skirt, are coming into favor, and are particularly affected by elderly women.

Many of the small shoulder mantles are composed almost entirely of jet motifs, with long fringes composing the shoulder pieces which are attached to a very small, long-pointed yoke of velvet.

One of the favorite styles of dress bodices has one revers of velvet on the right side, and cuffs and collars to match. The basque is cut very short on the hips, with the back arranged in two straight plaits.

The Tide of Immigration

It is thought that the immigration this year will exceed 1,000,000. The character of the immigration has greatly changed of late years. Germany now sends us about one-third as many settlers as she did six or seven years ago and Irish immigration is falling off. Ireland and Germany have disposed of their surplus population for the present. Russia, Austria, Hungary and Italy show an immense increase. Of the newcomers the Russians present rather the best appearance, being tall, vigorous and with an air of resolution. They are chiefly from the grain growing regions of the Black sea.

THE MYSTERY OF MARSHALL NEY.

Did He Really Live to be a School-teacher in North Carolina

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat publishes a letter from Houstonia, Mo., that contains testimony sufficient to increase the interest in the question whether Marshall Ney was executed. This from Colonel Thomas F. Houston, a pupil of the old French schoolteacher in North Carolina, Peter S. Ney. This is the Ney whose grave was opened the other day. Colonel Houston shows the handwriting of Ney, a Latin school-book that was his and tells a very interesting story. This is a part of it:

"The recent articles in the newspapers have excited great curiosity as to whether the old schoolteacher in the Carolinas and Virginia—P. S. Ney—was really the celebrated Marshall Ney of France. I knew him sixty or sixty-one years ago, or from 1826-'27 to a short time before his death. I was his pupil from January, 1830, until November, 1838, except at short intermissions during two or three years when I worked upon the farm. He was about five feet eleven inches tall, of fine physique and muscular. His head was large, so large, in fact, that it was necessary to send away to have his hats made. His head was bald, save at the sides and back, there was only a slight fringe of hair there, although it grew long, and was combed over to partially hide the baldness. On one side of his head—the left, I think—there was a scar about two and a half inches in length, which he told me was a saber-cut received in battle. It was healed, but there was an indenture in which a quill could have been placed. He told me he had been 'trepanned,' as he called it, and said he recovered rapidly from the operation and was soon in the saddle again ready for the conflict that was raging. He opened his shirt bosom and showed me scars upon his body inflicted at the same time as the wound described above by the shoes of cavalry horses charging over him. During the time of my tutelege under him, a strong attachment was formed between us, at on my part. He was frequently quite communicative with me. During the life of Napoleon Bonaparte's son he frequently told me of his intention to return to France, and asked me to go with him. Many times he reverted to the matter, always asking me if I would go with him. Assuring him that I would he said, 'I'll make a man of you.' I was not a student of his at the time of the death of Nopoleon's son, but never after that, to my knowledge, though his pupil for several years after, did he speak of returning to France. He spoke to me of French history and said: 'History says I was executed, but history is not correct. It is true I was sentenced to be executed, and was marched out for that purpose, but the men detailed to execute me were of my old command. As I walked by the file of soldiers I whispered, 'Aim high.' My old command had always been, 'Aim low, at the heart.' As I took my position in front of the file, refusing to have my eyes bandaged, I raised my hand and gave the command Fire.' They fired and I fell. I was examined by the surgeon and pronounced dead, and my body was delivered to friends for interment. I was secretly conveyed to Bordeaux, from whence I sailed to America, landing at Charleston, S. C., in the beginning of the year 1816."

Colonel Houston farther says:

"On one occasion Ney, while intoxicated, lay down in the snow near my father's house. Gen. John A. Young, of Charlotte, N. C., a cousin of mine, and a pupil of Ney, then a boy, saw him and told my father. Father sent several negro men with a horse to bring Ney to the house. I accompanied the negroes and found him asleep. Repeated efforts to rouse him proving ineffectual I concluded to have him placed on the horse and taken to the house. One of the negroes mounted the horse, when the other lifted Ney and placed him across the horse's shoulders. In that act the old man was awakened and his first words were: "What, put the duke of Elchingen on a horse like a sack? Let me down.' He struck one of the negroes, and they let him down. He walked with military tread a few steps to the fence, and placing his elbows thereon wept at the indignity which had been offered him. One of the negroes, addressing him, said: 'Mr. Ney can you ride?' 'Yes, I could ride into battle.' He mounted the horse and rode to the house without reeling, sitting erect and dignified in the saddle. I told father what Ney had said, and he told me that Marshal Ney was Duke of Elchingen, which was my first information on that subject, as I did not understand Ney's meaning. This affair was never mentioned to or by Ney afterwards.

"'Ney was a good Latin and Greek scholar and a fine mathematician. Philosophy and astronomy he did not teach. History I have understood, says Marshal Ney, was not educated. Whether he obtained his knowledge of Latin and Greek during his residence in America I know not, but I have in my possesion his old Latin grammar, published in 1818, in which are inserted a great number of Latin and English exercises, in his handwriting—such exercises as he used in instructing his pupils. In that grammar—and here is the book, said the colonel, as he sought among a heap of papers and manuscripts—were many of his autograph signatures, which were fac-similes of the signature under the portrait of Ney in the history of "Napoleon and His Marshals." These have been taken out by persons to whom the book was loaned or sent to friends as souvenirs.'"

[illegible] ly Marshal Ney, why did not he make the fact known publicly. If he was Marshal Ney and escaped execution in the manner herein related, his escape was by the connivance of the soldiers detailed for his execution, any of the surgeon and officers who superintended the same; and a knowledge of the fact that he was still living would most assuredly have caused the execution of the officers who had falsely reported that he had been executed. So that, on their account, he was under the greatest obligations of honor and gratitude not to make the fact public. Again, if his intention was to return to France when the proper time should come, and I know it to have been, would it not have been much easier to escape detection and get back to France if it were not known that he were living; and what could have been a greater surprise to the whole world, or struck such terror into the hearts of those opposing the return of the Napoleonic dynasty to the throne of France, or produced such enthusiasm among the French people as a military proclamation from Marshal Ney, at the head of the army of Napoleon II, long years after he was supposed to be slumbering in his grave?'"

There is at least one weak point in this story that has not been mentioned. It is that no Frenchman could have resisted the temptation to go back to Paris.

The Tribune Fresh Air Fund.

The New York Tribune has just sent out a souvenir which contains the following history of the Fresh Air Fund and the success of the work:

The summer season of 1886 was one of remarkable success in the prosecution of the work of the Fresh Air Fund, owing to the hearty hospitality and generous liberality of the numerous friends of the enterprise.

So many questions are asked, both as as to how the enterprise originated and as to the results it has accomplished, that The Tribune has resolved to issue this souvenir of the work to answer the many question asked. It asks the friends and promoters of the Fresh Air work to accept the same with compliments.

Late in summer in 1876, while the Rev. Willard Parsons was driving over the hills in his parish in Sherman, Pa., enjoying the sunset, the pleasant views, and the berries ripening on the walls the longing suddenly came upon him to bring some of the poor and sick city children into these green places, and give them plenty of air and room, plenty of care and plenty of milk. It was one of the moments when thought and purpose were twin-born.

Two or three friends whom he consulted dismissed the idea as visionary. Another, who heard him speak of it by accident—one who was an inspiration to all who knew her—hailed it with delight. "We must sow the tiny seed next summer," she said; "its roots will strike deeper than you can possibly foresee."

Early in June, the following year, Mr. Parsons presented the matter to his people in Sherman, and he found them quick to respond.

On July 19, 1877, he started with the first company of poor city children—nine boys and girls—for a two weeks' stay in the country. The hospitable people of Sherman took two other companies that year, making in all 60 children, and thus the Fresh Air enterprise was fairly launched.

The following year (1878), Mr. Parsons gave up his charge in Sherman; and he has ever since devoted his time exclusively to this work for the poor city children.

The N. Y. Evening Post took up the work and carried it on for four years under his management, until, in 1882, it was transferred to The Tribune. Under the auspices of The Tribune, it has grown rapidly, and far beyond all expectations; a fact, however, which is chiefly due to the earnest and hospitable support given to this work by the public. The following table shows the marked growth of the work:

	Number Children	Expenditures	Average Cost per Child
1877	60	$187 62	$3 12
1878	1,077	2,980 29	2 77
1879	2,400	6,511 54	2 71
1880	2,510	8,519 71	3 35
1881	3,203	8,217 64	2 54
1882	5,599	21,325 06	2 85
1883	4,250	14,903 67	3 36
1884	6,253	18,756 14	3 00
1885	6,650	19,863 95	2 98
1886	8,336	24,092 09	2 89
Total	40,368	$125,362 71	....

The manner in which the work is conducted is as follows: The children are selected by Christian workers among the poor of New York, Brooklyn and Jersey City. Necessarily, those that are selected are only a few among a larger number, and they are chosen on account of their needs, and as likely to be especially benefitted by a fortnight in the country.

The country friends receive the children into their homes for a fortnight (not as boarders, but as invited guests). This part of the work is organized in each place generally by the pastors. Generous readers of The Tribune supply the money to pay the expenses of transportation to and fro. There are no demands on the funds for salaries or office expenses, so that ever dollar contributed goes directly for the object for which it is given. The transportation companies carry the children at greatly reduced rates, and though the average distance is great (this year it was 260 miles), the expense per child is very small in comparison. The cost of giving each child a fortnight in the country during the summer of 1886 has been only $2 89.

The aggregate number of miles traveled by the children this year (1886) has been 4,334,700. It would have sent one child 173 times around the world, or it would have sent her to the moon and back about 9 times. This vast amount of traveling has been accomplished without any sort of accident or harm to any child.

The amount of real good done by these brief vacations to those who could never have had a fortnight's vacation, except for this work, is greater than can be easily estimated. New knowledge is gained; new and healthy views of life are acquired; new desires are implanted; and the child is made to realize the goodness that really rules over and the beauty that characterizes the great world. All who come in contact with the children in their tenement homes bear unanimous testimony to the great value of the moral and physical benefits bestowed by the work of the Tribune Fresh Air Fund.

The Profits on $40

A woman employed as a weaver in a mill at Lowell deposited $40 in the Lowell Institution for Savings in 1832. At various times between that year and 1859 she added to the deposit until it amounted to $152. In 1875 the principal, with dividends earned, amounted to $1,[illegible]. She has since drawn out $200, and the whole amount to her credit in 1886 was [illegible] [illegible]

Wealth in England.

The estate of the Vanderbilt family is estimated at $200,000,000; that of the Astors at nearly as much more, and of A. T. Stewart from $70,000,000 to 75,000,000. Jay Gould's wealth is set down in round numbers at $100,000,000 and Rockefeller's at $35,000,000. The property belonging to the estate of the rich Californians, Hopkins, Mills, Flood, Fair, Sharon, O'Brion, Mackay and Huntington, will reach it is thought, some $350,000,000 more, making in all $855,000,000. Even this enormous sum is not supposed to be equal the combined wealth of the Rothschilds. The richest man in Great Britain is the Duke of Westminster, whose income is rated at a guinea (21 shillings) a minute, or about $2,700,000 a year, derived almost entirely from real estate in the midst of London. The late William H. Vanderbilt is said to have an income at least three times as large. There are, however, more Englishmen than Americans with incomes of $1,000,000 or there about. England is progidiously wealthy (as well as extremely poor), and her wealth is the accumulation of hundreds of years, and is growing now at the rate of $600,000,000 annually, the net profit of all her industries and commercial enterprises. At the present rate of increase, she will have accumulated in twenty-five years fifteen thousands of millions capital.

Latest Thing in Dudes.

We noticed a slight change in the new spring style of dude. His head is shaped still more like a five-cent loaf of bread and his legs are a trifle more bowed than last year. This feature in the change of style seems to us superfluous and unnecessary, but we suppose it is all right. At any rate we do not propose to rail against the decrees of fashion. The newest dude carries his cane at an angle of forty-five degrees, suspended airily between his thumb and finger. The cane is occasionally changed from one hand to the other so as not to make the dude lopsided. The dude's pants are larger this year than formerly, or else the dude is shrinking, we are not certain which it is. His collar seems to be an exaggerated shirt cuff, fastened at the top with sleeve buttons. If the new spring dude can induce a dog to follow him so much the better, but we note a disinclination on the part of the dogs this year to do the following act.—Oil City Derrick.

The American Agriculturist as a "Daily."

During the continauce of the great Dairy and Cattle Show, held in New York City in the second week of May, the American Agriculturist Monthly, issued a daily paper on the grounds every morning at ten o'clock, of eighteen pages, describing the scenes and incidents from day to day, and presenting illustrations of the various cattle and farm implements as premiums were awarded them. Every number contained from thirty to forty engravings of cattle, etc., etc. It was rather a novelty for the veteran American Agriculturist, now not far from its fiftieth birthday.

And seeing his mistake young Mr. Cipher apologized and went out and told it all around as a capital good joke on the dentist.—Burdette, in Brooklyn Eagle.

Platt's Chlorides

A WORD WITH YOU.

BANGOR, MAINE, SPRING, 1887.

Preparatory to what follows, we will say that realizing the great work of healing upon which we have entered, that nothing may be set down to quackery or ignorance, we have prepared a short history of the professional life of W. H. BROWN, M. D., from whose formula we have for years prepared the most successful medicine for purifying and enriching the blood, inciting the torpid liver, and strengthening weak kidneys, —in short, for the speedy, safe and permanent cure of all diseases of the stomach, liver, and kidneys, that has ever been known in New England. This history, together with statements from many prominent people whom you will know, of relief secured and cures effected from sufferings and torture by these diseases, will be mailed to you if you send us your address. Better that in this letter we tell you where relief can be found. We have come late to the work with BROWN'S SARSAPARILLA. Naturally we have taken hold of the cases which other remedies, altho' advertised with persistency and at marvelous expense, have failed to cure. The results have been wonderful. Nowhere have we failed to give relief, and in no case where persistent and faithful use according to directions has been made of Brown's Sarsaparilla, has it failed to CURE any or all diseases of the blood, stomach, liver, and kidneys. Mrs. Ephraim Cunningham of East Bangor, Maine, heard of it, read of it, tried it, and was cured of her weakness in kidneys and troubled liver. Carlton P. Williams of Amesbury, Mass., says he is entirely cured of what physicians diagnosticated as Bright's disease, and pronounced incurable. Eben Morrison of Cleveland, Ohio, advised by a friend to use Brown's Sarsaparilly for his kidney troubles, did so and was cured. Benj. Hill of New York Corner, at 63 years of age, gained strength and vitality for his blood, and health to continue his daily duties. Tumors dispursed for Reuben Severance and Aaron French by Brown's Sarsaparilla. Scrofula cured in Hartley B. Fisher, Corinna, Me. But why continue? Get our book on good health and read for yourself the astounding results secured by the use of Brown's Sarsaparila, and remember these cases are those where eminent physicians have failed to find a remedy, and other medicines, advertise well and popularly introduced, have not benefitted, but Brown's Sarsaparilla, having been taken as a last resort, has proved efficacious and no other treatment was needed. Now with those facts in evidence, substantiated by reputable citizens accompanied by affidavits of prominent people, why not make this remedy the first, as it will then prove to you the only resort when you, your family or your neighbors are suffersng from any of the almost numberless disorders which arise from a deranged stomach and inactive liver, or weakened kidneys? Now a word in regard to the preparation and combination of this wonderful remedy. Our Mr. Warren for many years enjoyed the confidence of the late W. H. Brown, M. D., and in the prosecution of his business of pharmacist hundreds of times has he been called upon to put up the prescription, which is now compounded for popular sale, and for a few years has been known to the public as Brown's Sarsaparilla. It is entirely vegetable in its combination; the most powerful alterative-tonic properties known to the materia medica being skillfully prepared on a scientific basis, and the result of a perfect medicine for the relief and cure of dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation, biliousness, loss of appetite, inflammation of kidneys and bladder, Bright's disease, dropsy, gravel, jaundice, heartburn, rheumatism, neuralgia, scrofula, erysipelas, salt rheum, diabetes; for the removal of impurities of the blood; to incite to proper activity the sluggish torpid liver; and to strengthen and relieve disorders of the stomach. It also acts like a charm as a remedy for all female complaints. Brown's Sarsaparilla has such curative powers and is of such immeasurable value to sufferers that we have decided to commence the publication of a series of extensive articles, detailing its properties uses and cures; and hereafter you can receive such information from the columns of this paper. You can obtain the medicine of any dealer. Yours truly,

HANLAN the oarsman has had his day, it seems. He was beaten at Pullman, near Chicago Monday in a three mile race by Teemer thereby losing the championship of the world and $5,000. Teemer also beat Hosmer at New York.

A MATTER which THE TIMES has always urged was spoken of by Com. Metcalf in his remarks last Monday evening, namely the consolidating of all the school districts in this village into a Union Free School. The best results from an educational standpoint will never be attained until this is brought about. It will be accomplished sometime and the sooner the better. There will probably be a slightly increased school tax to be paid by property holders in district No. 1 but the increase will probably not be one-fifth as large as the amount that is paid yearly from that district to district No. 2 for tuition. All interested should give this important matter unbiased thought.

THE action of the village board in appointing a committee consisting of the president, trustees Nichols, Pardee and Rice to confer with the water works company in regard to securing water for fire and public purposes is certainly the right move to make. These gentlemen ought to be capable of judging as to what is for the best interests of the village and undoubtedly are. The Village Improvement Society also has a committee to represent them in this matter and as the society contains a large number of our most intelligent and enterprising citizens, their opinion in this matter is valuable. These committees should work conjointly and endeavor to secure water for the village. If by coming to an understanding with the village of Oswego Falls by which the company can supply water to both villages and an advantage to the taxpayers gained, it should be done. No time should be lost, for unless some understanding is arrive at and some conclusion reached, the rate of insurance will be increased 30 per cent. after June 10th as such instructions have been received by the local insurance agents from the State Board of underwriters.

THERE is no reason why the question of insurance in this village should be misunderstood. The last issue of the Patriot makes no effort to show why the rates of insurance are now in excess of what they were a year ago and conceals the fact that we are now receiving rates 20 per cent. lower than any village in the county outside of Pulaski, Oswego Falls and Mexico. New rates for insurance went into effect throughout this state on the first of December last and an advance of 25 per cent was made in all villages of Oswego county other than those mentioned. The increase of rates in this village lacked 20 per cent. of being as much as it would have been, had there not been a system of water works used for fire purposes when the rates were adopted by the insurance companies.

The price now paid is excessive but it is not in the power of local parties to remedy it. The State Board of Underwriters now announce that an additional increase of 30 per cent. will be made unless fire hydrants are used. This is in the power of local parties to avert, by making some arrangement by which the water works can be used for fire purposes.

Something New.

Outsiders frequently wonder where the railroads obtain proper return for the ingenious but costly methods adopted in advertising their lines. One of the latest to attract our attention is a nicely bound 64-page book entitled, "What to Do," containing description and correct rules for a large number of of games suitable for parlor or lawn, which has been issued by the Passenger Department of the the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway, and will we understand be forwarded postpaid upon receipt of 8 cents by C.H. Warren General Passenger Agent, at St. Paul. It is a book that would ornament almost any table and interest both old and young.

Read the Bee Hive advertisement. It will be profitable to you.

[Special to THE TIMES.]

To-day, Decoration Day, is being celebrated with all the old-timed vigor of the period, immediately succeeding the late Civil War. There don't somehow seem to be any diminution in the fervor of the old battle scarred veterans as each year adds to their already weighty burden, business cares. I rather think that the past two years of celebration have passed into history as being more fully, more thoroughly observed than any former times. It may be that the presence of the dead hero who rests from his earthly labors in Riverside's grateful shades by the noble Hudson's shores may in spirit pervade the breasts of our "Boys in Blue," commanding them to show a greater appreciation than formerly for the memory of our honored dead. Certain it is that G. A. R. posts have multiplied rapidly in this portion of the state in the past two or three years. Each succeeding year brings henceforth the memorial service at the tomb of Grant and the lessons of his life are sure of being fully presented by able talent.

I think even here where Money is King, business men are coming to recognize the propriety of a more strict observance of the day. Not only by closing their stores and offices, but by such decoration of house fronts as may be proper for the day. This disposition to decorate is becoming more and more generally observed. Of course the movements of such heroes as Farragut, Seward, Lincoln, LaFayette, and Washington are decorated as loving duties by the different posts of this city, but it may be here recorded, and not amiss either, to the credit of Edward Stokes, that for the past five years no Decoration Day has passed without the decorating of Worth's monument at his expense.

Sometimes the ornamentation of some of these statutes are suggestingly funny, for instance, Seward's statue represents him as setting in a rather pondrous arm chair; one hand holds a pen; the other an open scroll. The floral decorations considered a chaplet of laurel to be the thing appropriate; so he placed one upon the noble brow of the distinguished Senator. The effect is rather a funny one, and hardly a person passed it today who did not find in it something for amusement. Then again the decoration of Washington's equestrian monument had in mind that little hatchet story which always occupies so large a place in our school histories; so he has placed a floral representation of that particular hatchet no doubt, in a prominent place upon the panel of the pedestal. The same sort of remarks are passed upon this and notwithstanding the exquisite arangement of the other part of the decoration, the little hatchet seems to be the only thing seen.

The destruction of a whole block of tenement houses by the burning of a horse car stable on an adjacent block has turned the attention of a very large number of our thinking people to the necessity of some other means of locomotion for surface roads other than horses. This fire is, perhaps, the most extensive this city has seen in many years. I mean so far as dwelling houses are concerned. The horse car stable referred to occupied a block of land on Tenth Avenue and 53d St. It is surrounded by tenements, some with two families on a floor, others with four families. The greater portion of the people are poor, hardworking, industrious folks with rather large families. The car stables are usually filled with hay and grain in their upper stories and hence become a veritable tinder box. This proved the case with the Tenth avenue stables. The fatal elevator shaft became the great conveyance by which the fire reached the upper stories. In a very short while both sides of the adjacent street was on fire and several hundred people by morning were houseless, furniture burned and in a great many cases without any suitable clothing. These large structures necessary for the surface road's business are a menace to life and property in the neighborhood. Hence some other means of traction are being demanded. The cable system seems to be a bone of contention over which the tax payers, the friends of that system and the Legislature at Albany could not agree. This much is true, however, that the older surface companies have the right to substitute some other means than horses to move their cars. This may be steam, electricity or oil—either of these would not require the enormous tracts of land or the large buildings that horses need. Even cable traction would be the most economical in the end as it would need the least space for its working. Thus much has been shown in the upper part of the Island where cable traction is in successful operation.

The trial of Sharp will probably begin in earnest to-morrow or Wednesday. His half-dozen lawyers have fought valiently for him, so that he might not be kept in the Tombs during the last three days; but now that this holiday is over they will in all probability accept the first intelligent man to fill the jury box. This Sharp trial shows the worthless stuff this city contains, and which the commission of jurors seems to take special pains to get on the lists. More than 800 talismen have been examined and less than two per cent. have been found to be worthy the name of intelligent persons. The Sharp trial will be a noted one in the annals of law, for there are some entirely new questions to be passed upon. One in particular is whether the compulsory testimony of a witness before a legislative committee is admissable as evidence against that person when criminally indicted. The readers of THE TIMES will receive full reports during the progress of this case.

We have just received the [illegible] Mayor Hewitt's first [illegible]

[illegible] gas commission by which the city pays 25 cents per night for each of its lights. This is about as cheap as gas and a vastly better light. The Mayor as I have before remarked is doing his sworn duty very bravely indeed. Even the bosses of Tammany and the country acknowledge his fearlessness.

There is a strong probability that the sheriff will have the unpleasant duty of hanging a woman. An Italian woman some months ago deliberately shot her husband in the back, in order that by his death she could marry another man more in sympathy with her notions of what a model husband should be. When on trial a weeks ago she plead guilty of murder in the second degree and that was supposed to be the end of the case. But shortly after her counsel, Wm. T. Howe, represented to the court that she did not understand the case and desired to withdraw the plea and stand trial for the first degree. This was granted and on one day last week was declared guilty by the jury that had her case under consideration. This sanguinary result is due wholly to her counsel as it has since come out that it was wholly his act that induced her to withdraw the plea. There is no possibility of her receiving any mercy from the Recorder, and it is hardly possible that the Governor will in any way interfere. Her case is sad, extremely sad.

WANDERER.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL'S., Sept, 18, 1882.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O.: Have taken Hall's Catarrh Cure; am 48 years old. Had asthma 10 years, and a dreadful cough for five years. Have taken everything; went to the Hot Springs; have doctored with the doctors here; I have done nothing but take medicine for 19 years. When I commenced taking Hall's Catarrh Cure I was almost dead. I sent for the doctor the day I got Hall's Catarrh Cure, and I told him that I would die anyway and that I would try your medicine. I was very bad. How I suffered for 9 years! I could hardly breathe at times. I saw Hall's Catarrh Cure advertised in the papers and commenced taking it, I would have been under the ground to-day if it had not been for that. I have not had one bad spell of coughing since. In breathing my head feels well and I am well. It has done me a thousand dollars worth of good. There are ten of my friends, on seeing what it had done for me, taking it, and it is helping them. I only wish that everyone who has catarrh, asthma and a bad cough could see me, so that I could tell them all to take it. All that know me here know how I have suffered, (I have been here since 1858,) and say to me that "I am so glad you found something that could cure you." Everyone says, "how much better you look." The doctors say they are glad I found Hall's Catarrh Cure as the could not cure me.

I cannot express my gratitude to you for the good Hall's Catarrh Cure has done me. You can use as much of this letter as will do the afflicted good. Publish to the whole world—it is all true and they should know it.

Cheese Market.

[From the Utica Herald].

AT UTICA.

UTICA, N. Y, May, 30.

The almost universal offer for cheese to-day was 10c from the start, and buyers were unwilling to raise the bid until very late in the day, then a number of the best factories got a raise of ⅛c. with a few at ¼c. to ⅜c., but buyers hardly felt justified in paying over 10c. Salesmen were quite willing to unload at these prices, there being some doubt whether cheese will bring as much next week. At all events this is nearly the last of the the fodder make, and there was a pretty general clearing of the boards. The stock has been sold off so closely that cheese can be held back next week if desirable. It is believed, however, that there will be a demand for grass cheese and that this may sustain the market. Small cheese were in great request to-day, and buyers claim that there were not enough of them to supply the demand. Small skims sold nearly as high as full cream stock, and the competition for them was active. Following are the transactions of the day:

Lots.	Boxes.	Price.
14	876	9¾
6	357	9⅞
36	3,012	10
15	1,616	10⅛
8	459	10¼
2	1[illegible]	10⅜
1	100	p. t.
1[illegible]2	537
	9,4[illegible]1	Com.
Total	10,071

Ruling price 10c. Transactions one year ago were 10,910 boxes; ruling price 6⅝c. Two years ago 11,834 boxes, ruling 5¾.

AT LITTLE FALLS.

LITTLE FALLS, May 30.

Cheese quite unexpectedly we have had an advance in price of fully one-half cent per pound, the bulk price last week being 9½c. Factorymen, although seeking to secure the highest figures possible, finally sold out close to the hoop in nearly all cases. Buyers thought that the advance was a mistake and were not disposed to speculate on their own account at all, confining their purchases to orders in hand. It is the general opinion that lower figures will prevail next week, though it is hoped not to such an extent as some claim. White and colored stock sold on the same basis here to-day, although a slight discrimination in favor of white still prevails in New York. Following are the transactions:

Lots.	Boxes.	Price
5	227	9¾cents
16	853	10 cents
53	3,194	10¼cents
8	555	Com.
83	4,829
Farm dairy	591
	5,420

Farm Dairies—Sales of 591 boxes farm cheese were made at 9¾ to 10½c. The ruling price was 10¼c. and only three lots secured 10⅝c.

Butter.—Sales of butter were very light, only 20 packages of farm dairy at 20 to 21c., and 15 packages of creamery at 21c.

AT FULTON.

Twenty-one factories were represented at this market on Monday evening and 1,177 boxes sold mostly at 10 cents, Utica ruling. Last year the price was 6½ cents.

Someone wrote to a country editor to ask how he would "break an ox." The editor replied as follows: If only one ox, a good way would be to hoist him, by means of a long chain attached to his tail, to the top of a pole about forty feet from the ground. Then hoist him by rope a tied to his horns to another pole. Then descend on his back a five-ton pile driver, and if that don't break him let him start a country newspaper and trust people for subscriptions. One of the two ways will do it, sure.

T. D. Lewis continues to sell stove and chestnut coal, delivered, at $4.65 per ton. [illegible]

[illegible] Soldiers from Mississippi and Minnesota, from Massachusetts and Texas, are walking around arm in arm, in a peaceful capture of the city. Twenty-five or even twenty years ago, no one would have dared to predict such a scene at the National Capital in 1887.

Nothing more eloquently and impressively marks the change which has been wrought in the relations of the sections or the progress which the country has made towards a permanent restoration of the Union than the presence here of the sons of veterans of both armies, from North and South, encamped under the same flag and engaged in fraternal competitions for military honors.

To most of the militia in camp under the Washington Monument now the civil war is only an unhappy tradition, and they emulate each other in their patriotic devotion to the Nation's flag. Their presence on the Potomac is truly auspicious and all of them share the title of guardians of the Nation.

The ceremony of opening the camp on Monday last was brief, but it was performed reverently and with all due pomp. About noon the Washington Light Infantry, headed by a band marched up and formed a hollow square around the flag staff. At the foot of it lay rolled up the big flag ready to fly to the breeze. Gen. Auger, the commander of the camp, accompanied by certain Generals, Colonels, Captains, and Chaplain stepped into the open space and offered an appropriate prayer, at the conclusion of which the flag was hauled into position while the band played "The Star Spangled Banner" and the troops saluted the colors. The Commandant then issued orders governing the camp and movements of the troops during the drill.

There is a different programme for each day of the drill, though each day there are competitive drills by the infantry, artillery and zouaves, and each day there is a dress parade at five o'clock in the afternoon. On Wednesday all Washington, apparently, was out of doors to see a brilliant street parade by the soldiery in full uniform, which made a tour of a small portion of the city after it had been reviewed by the President. The scene was a very brilliant one. The President, surrounded by the Governors of different states and their staffs, with many other prominent men, occupied a grand stand erected for the purpose in front of the White House on Pennsylvania avenue. The day was perfect for pageantry, the discipline and marching of many of the organizations very fine, and the uniforms showy and striking.

There is a large crowd of visitors in the city and the camp affords so interesting a sight to them as well as to the citizens, that the policemen have quite as much as they can do to control the curious surging mass of people which literally overrun the ground. Military discipline is in force however, and as far as the soldiers are concerned, everything moves in order. Still some of the lads thought it was more practical than funny, when, on Tuesday night they were required to do guard duty in the pouring rain.

This reminds me that the principal event at the drill ground on Tuesday was a terrific storm, which unroofed the grand stand, and filled the crown with consternation, besides drenching it to the skin, and causing some serious accidents in the way of broken limbs. It was in the afternoon while the competing drills were in progress. Suddenly the sky grew dark and in a moment a cyclone developed which blew a cloud of dust and sand in the direction of the grand stand until the Washington Monument itself was hardly visible. In a moment more there was a downfall of rain which was equally blinding.

For a little while the scene that followed was indescribable. The grand stand swayed like a reed in the terrible gale, and the crash and noise of the flying roof made the already panic stricken crowd feel sure that the stand was giving way under it. Several of the carriages waiting on the drive outside when the roof was carried off were smashed by flying planks and timbers, and others were saved by the horses taking fright and running away. Telegraph wires were torn from their bearings, umbrellas were hoisted only to be wrecked, people seized chairs and held them over themselves in their efforts to ward off a little of the pelting rain. Women and children shrieked and fainted and fell and got trampled upon and the paraphernalia of the pyrotechnec theatre on the drill ground was so injured that there could be battle and fireworks that evening.

The Oswego District Stewards Convention will be held at Orwell on Monday, June 13, at 2 p. m.

A large number from Oswego were here to attend the Decoration Day ceremonies.

Oswego District Conference at Orwell, commencing Monday evening, June 13, and holding over Tuesday.

Lee Edgarton, catcher of the Eclipse, broke a tendon of his leg while sliding to second base during the game at the Fair grounds Monday.

The house of N. Parker at Bernhards Bay was destroyed by fire last Thursday afternoon. The insurance which was $600 covers the loss. The furniture was saved.

Three tents were pitched and an ice cream and plant sale held in the park Decoration Day, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of Zion church. It was well patronized.

Father Early delivered a sermon in French at St. Louis church, Oswego Sunday evening and was afterwards tendered a reception at Father Auger's residence by the Sodality of that city.

It is announced that there will be a temperance celebration on the fair grounds July 4th. [illegible]

The [illegible] programme of Decoration Day did not begin until 1:30 p. m. but in the forenoon G. A. R. men in our form, members of the band and drum corps, farmers and farmers' wagons, young men with their best girls, merchants and citizens decorating their places of business and homes, were all sure indications that the day was to be observed in an appropriate manner. The day was all that could be desired, a slight breeze stirring cooled to some extent the atmosphere which otherwise would have been sultry and extremely disagreeable. It was what we call a typical Decoration Day. The celebration of Monday showed that, in this locality at least, the custom of celebrating the deeds of the heroes and martyrs who struggled in the great cause, is growing, not waning, as the years roll by, that as the ranks of the veterans grow thin, the memory of their valor increases and in years to come sons and grandsons will live to perpetuate the memory of their valiant sires and celebrate this the day set aside for that purpose.

AT THE OPERA HOUSE.

Before one o'clock crowds began to gather near the entrance to the opera house and before the doors were open more than could possibly gain admittance had congregated there. This mass of humanity struggled and forced their way into the hall until it was filled to its utmost capacity.

The stage was occupied by the orator of the day, U. S. Senator Hiscock, Hon. H. C. Howe, Hon. John A. Place, Hon. Geo. M. Case, District Attorney Mead, School Commissioner Metcalf, Ex-School Commissioner Parkhurst, pastors of the different churches, representatives of the village papers, officers of post Schenck G. A. R. and other well known citizens also a company of young zouaves, sons of veterans, twenty strong under the the command of their instructor Comrade Ellis. The exercises opened with the reading of memorial orders from headquarters by Adjutant Charles Hewitt. The welcome address by Commander A. J. Osborne followed and remarks on the indorsement of Holy Scripture to the significance of this day. Senior Vice-Commander A. S. Palmer read the words of Holy Scripture that may refer to the navy. Junior Vice-Commander Richard Lathrop those that may apply to the army; Officer of the Day E. J. Kelly read the proclamation of Peace from Holy Writ after which Chaplain Geo. Ward read of "The Nation and its Dead." The Memorial service by Post Schenck having been completed, the grand male chorus of 30 voices under the leadership of J. F. Cooper rendered "Gather Roses of the May." Prayer was then offered by the Post Chaplain Geo. Ward. The grand chorus sang "The Glorious Chief." After this Mrs. G. V. Emens read "At Rest in Mt. Adnah" an an appropriate poem written some ten years ago by Mr. W. E. Williams then local editor of THE TIMES. The orator of the day Hon. Frank Hiscock was then introduced by Hon. H. C. Howe. The Senator spoke for twenty-five minutes in a deliberate and impressive manner. He touched on the labor and temper. ance questions merely to let those present get an inkling of his stand on these important issues. He dwelled in glowing terms on the patriotism and fidelity of the soldiers in the late civil struggle and the fitness of having a day set aside to commemorate their gallant deeds.

After singing "Requiem of the Dead," by the grand chorus, the benediction was pronounced by Rev. W. Dempster Chase.

ON THE MARCH.

The post with its auxiliaries formed in front of the opera house in the following order: Drum Corps, Firing party, Young Zouaves, Good Templars Band, Post Schenck G. A. R., Orator of the Day, guests of the Post, citizens and others in carriages. In this order they marched up Cayuga to Fourth to Broadway to the cemetery where a large concourse of people assembled to witness the special services of the Post at the grave of their dead comrades. Here a prayer was offered by the chaplain of the post, address delivered by the Post Commander and the beautiful "Slumber Song" sung by Comrades Cooper and Gilbert. Two volleys were then discharged over the graves after which the impressive ceremony of decorating the graves was carried out.

As the opera house was given to the G. A. R. on Decoration Day, the Institute did not convene until Monday evening. Hon. A. S. Draper Supt. of Public Instruction was present at this session having telegraphed to School Commissioner Metcalf that it was impossible for him to be here on Wednesday the day advertised.

The exercises opened with a song by the Congregationalist church choir followed by prayer by the Rev. Chas. Olmstead. An address of welcome was then given to the teachers by F. E. Bacon Esq., the popular President of the Board of Education of this village. He spoke of the pleasure that all felt in having the teachers in our beautiful village for a week, paid a glowing tribute to moulders of youthful minds that are destined in the future to fill the places of the present generation. He also took occasion to mention the many improvements that had taken place in the village since he had the pleasure of welcoming them two years ago.

Commissioner Metcalf responded to the address in an able manner and showed what is already well-known that he is a wide awake, energetic and progressive commissioner. State Supt. Draper spoke for about an hour on matters of great interest to teachers and all interested in educational work. He mentioned the amount of school money used in this, the Empire state and showed that if we did not, we ought to have most excellent schools. Teachers should strive against superficiality in their school work and endeavor to inculcate thoroughness. That while advancement was being made in all educational branches, the advancement in high school work was more marked. That of the school children in this state 96 per cent. never entered a high school and that the common interest demanded that this large percentage should have the very best of teachers in elementary studies.

If he had absolute control in the matter, primary teachers would receive as high wages as high school teachers. The defects of teachers' in the past and the hopes of their usefulness in the future were considered. The advantage of the new law which provides that the teachers shall receive their wages at least once a month was shown. Mr. Draper makes no pretention of being an orator but his talk to the teachers and friends of education was practical and filled with good sense and it can readily be seen how he has accomplished so much during the time that he has been at the head of educational interests in this state. After singing by the choir adjournment was made.

TUESDAY.

FORENOON.

Institute convened. Singing led by Prof Cooper and devotional exercises by Prof. Albro, the conductor.

Dr. Hoose then occupied the attention of the institute on the subject of good teaching versus scholarship and his great cry was more professional study, study teaching from the students standpoint. The teacher's mind must be on the child watching its mental symptoms.

Within the experience of the pupil use sight memory and some reasoning beyond experience use imagination and some reasoning and be very careful of the child's mind in the last operations.

RECESS.

Prof Albro commenced his work on course of study for common schools. Starting with reading, which he said should occupy a large share of attention in teaching, discussed the organization of reading classes and the time given to each exercise and was just discussing the method of conducting classes when his hour expired.

After recess Dr. Hoose resumed his subject and his first great point was [illegible] inside the activities of the child in the lines laid for him. Incite interest by mastering the subject. He gave a strong discussion of these matters with pointed illustrations.

AFTERNOON.

Institute called to order by Commissioner Metcalf. Music conducted by Prof. Cooper.

Course of study for Commen schools was then resumed by Prof. Albro. In finishing the theme of reading, he thought three or five days too long to dwell upon two pages. Dr. Hoose thought reading a mastery of forms.

In discussing methods of spelling Conductor Albro decidedly favored written exercises. Penmanship, the much neglected art, was then interestingly discussed, nearly all agreeing that an endeavor to construct a plain figures should be inforced regardless of arm movement.

RECESS.

Singing. Forms of proceedure in numbers was then taken up by Dr. Hoose. He showed the liberties which pupils may enjoy in arriving at proper conclusions. His theory being that pupils should not be required to conform strictly to the thecher's process. In Grammar, give the idea then the term. After intermission and singing Prof. Albro resumed the subject of Penmanship, stated that two or three lessons per week should be taught in Drawing. He declared four classes in Arithmetic and two classes in Geography enough, which was generally concurred in. He also touched briefly on Physiology and Grammar before adjournment was made.

EVENING.

The evening exercises opened with quartet singing by Messrs. Gilbert, Cooper, Hoff and Colt, followed by devotional exercises by Rev. Mr. Palmer. "Tread the Path of Duty" a solo, was then rendered by N. H. Gilbert.

Dr. J. H. Hoose, principal of the Cortland Normal school then gave his lecture "The Educational Rights of Youth" Which was attentively listened to and proved highly satisfactory to the large number present.

WEDNESDAY.

Institute opened at nine o'clock by singing. Devotional exercises by Prof. Albro. The subject of Primary Geography was taken up and ably conducted by Miss S. J. Walter of the Oswego Normal school, at ten o'clock recess was taken for fifteen minutes After singing, the exercise in Geography was resumed by Miss Walter who showed herself throughout to be a most capable instructress on this subject. Prof. Albro, after a recess was taken, took up the question of school management and answered questions on this subject until adjournment was made at noon.

This afternoon the continuation of Prof. Albro's and Miss Walter's subjects are in progress. This evening Dr. Mary Lee of the Oswego Normal school will deliver her lecture on "A Day in Egypt."

Chaplain McCabe's Lecture.

Fully six hundred people had assembled in the M. E. church last Friday when Chaplain McCabe passed down the aisle accompanied by Rev. M. R. Webster pastor of the Trinity M. E. Church of Oswego.

Mr. E. R. Redhead in a pleasing manner presented the orator to those assembled and announced his subject "The Bright Side of Life in Libby Prison."

The chaplain, with whom nearly all felt quite well acquainted, stepped forward acknowledging the liberal applause that greeted him. Below the medium height, with iron gray whiskers, bright and sharp eyes, which sparkle with intelligence, a smiling countenance which attracts all and a melodious voice, which can be used with equal effectiveness in pathos or humor, these are a few of the personalities and qualifications which appear in Chaplain McCabe, which have made him so successful in his particular work and his name famous. The chaplain opened with a song playing his own accompaniment. This was followed by a selection in which the Rev. Mr. Webster took part and Mrs. E. R. Redhead played an accompaniment.

The orator then entered upon his lecture tracing the career and work done by his own, an Illinois regiment and never failing to give the audience the benefit of any laughable incident or event that appeared conspiciously and happened so frequently in army life. He related in a semi-humorous vein the manner in which he was captured and treated until he found himself within the confines of Libby prison. In relating the events which transpired in this Southern prison, he omitted, as far as possible, the terrible sufferings that were endured and showed that in the midst of such want, disease and neglect the loyal heart always beat with the hope of victory for the boys in blue and their ultimate release. The appearance of Hon. Neal Dow of Maine, at Libby prison was an incentive to the chaplain to work into his lecture a short temperance appeal and a stronger one is seldom heard. For over an hour and a half Chaplain McCabe held the audience with his entertaining, pleasing and instructive lecture and closed the evening with a few familiar songs in which all present joined.

The Professor Surprised.

The secret having leaked out last Monday afternoon that it was Prof Clapp's birthday, arrangements were quietly made by a few of his neighbors and friends to celebrate the event. At the close of the exercises at the opera house, a suspicious looking company armed and equiped with various souvenirs of the occasion, proceeded to the professor's residence. Completely surprised and having no weapons of defence, he surrendered unconditionally. For this timely show of discretion, he was rewarded with a continuous flow of eloquence for nearly an hour as numerous and useful gifts, remembrancers of the day, were presented to him by appreciative donors.

Prof. Clapp recovered from his surprise in time to respond most appropriately after which the company dispersed to their respective abodes highly pleased at the complete success of their mid-night invasion.

Prof. Clapp during his year's stay in Fulton has demonstrated not only his great efficiency as a teacher but also that he is in the possessor of those personal qualities that make friends.

A match game of base ball was played at the fair grounds Monday afternoon between the Eclipse and Franconia base ball clubs. The game resulted in a victory for the former by a score of 24 to 18.

Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Redhead celebrated the tenth anniversary of their wedding last week Tuesday. They were given a surprise by a number of their friends who called upon them in the evening.

There were no services at Zion church on Sunday, the pastor Rev. Mr. Goodyear having been called to Bridgeport, Conn., by the serious illness of his father. Word has been received that there has been an improvement in his father's condition.

The marriage of Mr. J. Frank Willard and Miss May L. French will occur at the residence of the lady's parents Mr. and Mrs. Edwin H. French on First street Wednesday June 8th at 4 p. m. This will be an event of great social interest as the contracting parties have a large circle of friends.

James Lampman died at his home in Granby Sunday night aged 81 years. The funeral services were held at 1 p. m. to-day and the remains interred in Mt. Adnah. Mr. Lampman was a much respected citizen and had lived in Granby for 53 years.

Among those present Decoration Day, were Hon. J. A. Place of the Oswego Times, Hon. G. M. Sweet of Phœnix, Ex-Postmaster Dygert, now of the County Clerk's office; Ex-School Commissioner Parkhurst of Scriba, Assembly Clerk Smith of Schrœppel, S. Holroyd of the Palladium and Surrogate David of Phœnix.

The Criterion Dramatic Company played in the opera house every night last week, to painfully small audiences. The largest number present was on Saturday afternoon when school children were admitted for 5 cents. The troupe possesses some merit but not enough to attract large audiences in this village where theatre goes are accustomed to have better attractions.

The Fulton "Crumbs" held the last of their series of parties at Church's hall last Wednesday evening. These socials have been a source of much pleasure to a certain class of young people in the village during the winter months. The last of the series was equal to the preceeding ones, although it was not so largely attended. Schilling's orchestra of Oswego, five pieces, furnished the music—the best of the season. The evening being as pleasant as could be hoped for at this season of the year made it more pleasant for those that enjoyed dancing than it otherwise could have been.

[illegible] all parts of the village, Oswego Falls and the surrounding country, to listen to the memorial sermon by Rev. W. Dempster Chase before the members of the G. A. R. It was a union service, all the other protestant churches being closed and their pastors occupied seats about the pulpit. It was evident long before the exercises begun, by the crowds that could be seen streaming toward the church, that all would not be able to gain entrance and such proved to be the case, many being compelled to return to their homes, unable to get within. The members of Post Schenck, G. A. R. came in a body at 7:30 and occupied the seats that had been reserved for them directly in front of the platform.

Every seat, the aisles, niche and corner of the church now being filled, the exercises opened with prayer by the Rev. Mr. Palmer of the Presbyterian church; "Hold the Fort" was then sung by the male chorus consisting of 33 voices lead by Prof. Cooper, which was followed by the reading of scripture by Rev. Mr. Breaker of the Baptist church. Rev. Mr. Fulford of the Free Methodist church then read the hymn "Sing of Thy Redeemer" which was sung by the choir.

The memorial sermon by Rev. W. Dempster Chase followed, who took his text from II. Timothy, second chapter and third verse.

"Thou therefore endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ."

Mr. Chase in his able and characteristic manner proceeded to show the analogy between a soldier fighting for the cause he loves and a follower of Christ, maintaining and upholding the true religion. His apt illustrations, earnest eloquence and sincere appeals touched the mind and heart of his audience and left its imprint. He showed that strifes, contentions and shortcomings which Christians and soldiers meet with in following their duty, should not be taken into consideration when seeking Christianity or fighting for your country's honor. The work of the soldier and the Christian were nicely interwoven and the conclusions clearly drawn. For over an hour the vast audience listened attentively to this able and eloquent preacher, who as a soldier and minister of the gospel was so able to preach the memorial sermon and assist in keeping alive the memory of the departed soldiers who fought, bled and diedfor the glorious cause. Prayer was then offered by Rev. Mr. Olmstead of the Congregational church, Oswego Falls. The choir sang "Over There" and all were dismissed with the benediction.

If the mistakes of last year are profited by this season, the primary step to success will have been taken.

Salt is cheap. For use in butter get the best. But remember that even the best will not save poor butter.

Did you make any mistakes in your spring's work last year? Don't forget them. Take time to do every kind of work carefully and well.

A recent estimate places the value of dairy prospects in this country in 1886 at $780,445,688.

The Texas legislature has passed a public land bill giving the farmer a chance to secure a homestead on forty years' credit at 5 per cent. interest.

To have the best success with small fruits, manure highly and give thorough cultivation. Better raise 300 bushels on one acre than on three.

Unless we make up our minds that it shall not be neglected, the danger is great that work in the garden will be crowded out by the regular farm operations.

The farmer of to-day with brains and ambition to make his farm pay must clear his mind of cobwebs and his back of moss, and take his garden out into the open field.

Wet feet are as bad for the hens as for men. Be sure that the ground floor of the poultry house is enough higher than the surrounding ground to keep it perfectly dry.

It is a good rule to keep no more live stock than can be well fed. It is also a good rule to keep no more orchard than you can afford to feed fell. Out of nothing, nothing comes.

In purchasing a horse for farm work give the preference to a lively walker. The fast walk is worth more to a farmer than any kind of trot. But then your land should be clear of stones.

The Jersey cattle are said to be increasing in size. Those in this country are much larger and hardier in than those brought over twenty years ago, and we have better stock here than can be procured elsewhere, not excepting the Isle of Jersey.

Seed Potatoes.

At a meeting of the Massachusetts Board of Agriculture, last winter, a speaker gave, as the result of years of observation and experiments, the following conclusions: First. Whole potatoes will produce a crop from a week to ten days earlier than cut potatoes. Second. Small whole potatoes will produce for many years in succession just as good, if not better results than large potatoes cut the size of the small whole ones. Third. The seed of a potatoe is better to plant than the stem end, because the plants start with more vigor and produce larger and more potatoes. Fourth. A large piece of potatoe is better to plant in ordinary soil, and will produce a much better crop than ordinary pieces or single eyes. Fifth. Potatoes with sprouts long enough to break off in planting are not so good as potatoes with the eyes started just enough to show their good condition. Sixth. The form of a potatoe cannot, as a rule, be changed by the selection for planting of any particular form. Seventh. Two distinct varieties will not mix by planting in the same hill. Eighth. The potatoe scab is a blemish that the more we investigate the less we appear to know about it.—Our Country Home.

A Big Town.

If anyone were to walk one way through all the streets of London, he would be obliged to go a distance of 3,600 miles, or as far as it is across the American continent, from New York to San Francisco. In our approach to this city, as well as in our rambles through its streets, we shall not be struck so much by its splendid and imposing appearance as by its immensity. Go where you may, there seems to be no end of the town. It is fourteen miles one way and eight the other, and contains a population of nearly 4,000,000 which is greater, indeed, than that of Switzerland or the kingdoms of Denmark and Greece combined. We are told on good authority that there are more Scotchmen in London than in Edinburgh, more Irishmen than in Dublin and more Jews than in Palestine, with foreigners from all parts of the world, including a large number of Americans. Yet there are so many Englishmen in London that one is not likely to notice the presence of these people of other nations.

This vast body of citizens eat every year 400,000 oxen, 1,500,000 sheep, 8,000,000 chickens and game birds, not to speak of calves, hogs and different kinds of fish. They consume 500,000,000 oysters, which, although it seems like a large number, would only give, if equally divided among all the people, one oyster every third day to each person. There are 300,000 servants in London, enough people to make a large city; but as this gives only one servant to each dozen citizens, it is quite evident that a great many of the people must wait on themselves.—St Nicholas.

Holstein Cattle.

These excellent cattle, in some sections of the country, are gradually replacing the Jerseys. They have been known for 500 years in Holstein. Immense quantities of butter and cheese are made there for the London market, and breeding was carried on there long before it was begun in Great Britain. The testimony of many eminent men is in favor of the Holstein breed. The cheese makers of Holland have cows giving twenty-eight wine quarts a day. The fattening qualities of the Holsteins are remarkable. There is on a farm near Gwynedd, Pa., a cow five years of age, weighing 3,600 pounds. There are four others weighing 1,140, 1,175, 1,145 and [illegible] pounds respectively. As milk producers the Holsteins are unequalled. [illegible] has a record of 18,12 pounds of milk in 365 days, and Constance S. gave [illegible]-three pounds of milk in one day, [illegible] which has never been equalled. [illegible] makes the Holsteins rank [illegible] won the challenge cup [illegible] ninety-nine pounds and 6½ [illegible] butter in thirty days. Aaggie [illegible]

[illegible] the district school. In it the great majority of the farmers of to-day received their education, and in it the great majority of those of the next generation will receive the whole of their schooling.

Is the country school doing what it should for the farmer's boy? Is it giving to the boy who will remain on the farm that kind of an education which will be the best preparation for life's work?

What is an education for? Why should a boy spend so much time in the school-room? The purpose of a boy's education is to fit him for his work, whatever that may be. The education given in a country school ought then to fit the boy to be a successful farmer, for that is to be the profession of most country school-boys.

What education does the farmer's profession demand? The ability to read, write, and understand the English language and to make readily all the ordinary numerical calculations connected with his business—this is all, some say, that a farmer needs, and this is practically all that many of the schools supply. But is this enough? Shall we set the standard of education for the farmer at the very lowest notch? Shall we in this way say that the poorest education is sufficient for the farmer? We certainly do not think that farming is the occupation for which the poorest education is sufficient. Give the boy opportunity to become acquainted with the things around him. Put the study of soils, plants, animals, etc., into your schools. Ask your school-teachers to give instruction of this kind. Demand of them that they know enough to give such instruction in the right way. If you will demand only the best of teachers for your children, you can have these things taught to them; but if you are willing to take, year by year, the young and poorly prepared teachers, the work will not and can not be done. You will have to pay roundly for such efficient teachers; but will it not be the best economy in the long run, for are they not to instruct your children for their whole life's work?—American Agriculturist for June.

Getting Mad Over Trifles.

It takes so little to make a man mad. Like a dog in a crowd, somebody treads inadvertantly upon his toes and he yelps on general principles. He cannot locate the aggressor, so he includes the crowd, as teachers do when they keep a whole class in after school because Tommy Traddles whispered. A man will endure great physical pain, horrible mental anxiety, bankruptcy, desertion and the brush of death's battle ax, but will howl like a lunatic and swear like a trooper over an unruly collar button, or an innocent old hen he is trying to chase through an open barn door! A woman will trot around all day with a twenty pound pug dog in her arms, sit through a Bernhardt matinee with a high hat in front of her, walk ten miles on a shopping expedition and preserve her amiability, but will whip her child cruelly because it has spilled her cologne or lost her thimble. A man is proud of his muscle, and will stand up and be buffeted by a boxer and pummeled into a human poultice by an antagonist and call it sport, but if his baby boy runs against him and jogs his coffee cup, or a passer by on the street jostles him, he is mad enough to set Constantinople on fire.—Amber in Chicago Journal.

Good Joke on the Colonel.

As Colonel Mooney was going home the other day he saw the wagon of a traveling photographer. "I will stop and have a picture taken, just for fun," he mentally remarked, entering the peripatteic establishment.

"There," said the photographer, showing him a proof; "I think this is a pretty good likeness."

The colonel looked at it, and finally said, "It'll do."

When he got home he showed it to his wife, and jokingly told her it was a picture of the "Wild Man from Borneo" down in the Bowery.

"You can't fool me," said his wife, examining the picture critically, "I've seen the Wild Man from Borneo, and he is not half so ugly and frightful looking as this!"—New York Mercury.

Staggered Even the Mules.

A tall man and a short man boarded a street car yesterday as it rumbled down Third street. The tall passenger stooped to get in the doorway, while the little man's head was not far above the handle of the door.

"How much fare?" asked the tall man of the conductor.

"Five cents," was the reply.

"How much for me," asked the sawed-off man."

May be corrected, the Digestive organs strengthened, and the Bowels regulated, by taking Ayer's Pills. These Pills are purely vegetable in their composition. They contain neither calomel nor any other dangerous drug, and may be taken with perfect safety by persons of all ages.

I was a great sufferer from Dyspepsia and Constipation. I had no appetite, became greatly debilitated, and was constantly afflicted with Headache and Dizziness. I consulted our family doctor, who prescribed for me, at various times, without affording more than temporary relief. I finally commenced taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time my digestion and appetite my bowels were regulated, and, by the time I finished two boxes of these Pills my tendency to headaches had disappeared, and I became strong and well.—Darius M. Logan, Wilmington, Del.

I was troubled, for over a year, with Loss of Appetite, and General Debility. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and, before finishing half a box of this medicine, my appetite and strength were restored. —C. O. Clark, Danbury, Conn.

Ayer's Pills are the best medicine known to me for regulating the bowels, and for all diseases caused by a disordered Stomach and Liver. I suffered for over three years with Headache, Indigestion, and Constipation. I had no appetite, and was weak and nervous most of the time.

BY USING

three boxes of Ayer's Pills, and, at the same time dieting myself, I was completely cured. My digestive organs are now in good order, and I am in perfect health.—Philip Lockwood, Topeka, Kans.

Ayer's Pills have benefited me wonderfully. For months I suffered from Indigestion and Headache, was restless at night, and had a bad taste in my mouth every morning. After taking one box of Ayer's Pills, all these troubles disappeared, my food digested well, and my sleep was refreshing.—Henry C. Hemmenway, Rockport, Mass.

I was cured of the Piles by the use of Ayer's Pills. They not only relieved me of that painful disorder, but gave me increased vigor, and restored my health.—John Lazarus, St. John, N. B.

AT REST IN MT. ADNAH.

As Written and Delivered by W. E. Williams, Decoration Day, May 30th, 1877.

Dead! sighed the whispering South winds—hushed in their moveless repose;
Deaf to the voices of friendship; proofs against bullets of foes;
Blind to the glare of the noon-day; heedless of shadows of night,
Sons, sires, husbands and brothers, slain in defense of the right.

Gently, then, loving arms bore them, back from the battle's red field,
Wrapped in the dear flag they died for, rather than ever to yield—
Back to the darlings who knew them; back to the firesides they left;
Back, where the fast falling tear drops, told of the kindred bereft.

Just here, where loving steps linger—where eyes turn lovingly back—
Halt of the heroes was ordered; rest and a final bivouac;
Blankets were spread 'mid the blossoms decking the hillside and dell,
Just where the twittering song birds echo the story we tell.

Here, side by side, are they sleeping, each in his deep, narrow bed,
Followers faithful and earnest, true to the spirit that led;
Sheridan, Sisson, and Fleming, 'round whom is lingering still,
Honor that vanisheth never; patience that echoes, "Thy Will."

Backus, and Loomis, and Wilson, Bradshaw and Steele,
Rest 'neath the quivering grave grass, under the mounds where we kneel;
Lusk, too, and Havens, and Ottman, Mosher and Roderick and Hunn,
Peacefully sleep where we laid them after their great work was done.

The Woods, and the Schencks, and DeForest, respond to the roll call no more,
Only in answer to Jesus, over on yon brighter shore.
Dead! Somers, Fish, Clook, and Withey, Francis and Worden so true,
Lie where the glimmering sunlight kisses the flowers we strew.

Sometime when death shuts our eyelids—when we go up there above;
Angels, who wait at the doorway, will show us the souls that we love;
Dunham and Hutchins will greet us, Emory too, we shall meet,
Clothed in the white robes of Heaven near by the throne at God's feet.

Robinson, Butler and Murphy, and Downey, will anxiously wait,
There in the glittering pathway, close by the beautiful gate,
With Fergurson, Stay and Disten who fought till God called them away
Ever to dwell where the angels know not the Blue from the Gray.

Miller, and Wybron, and Harris, lost in the vanishing years,
Fell with our Leslie and Fuller, bathed in the tenderest tears;
Hutchinson, Reynolds, and Patrick, scorched by the battle's hot breath,
Church, Sweet, and brave VanCamp brothers, all of them gone to their death.

Swart, Lynch, and Ladd, to have vanished, far from the scenes of this earth;
A lone, vacant chair tells the story, close by each sorrowing hearth.
Phelps and LaDuke have gone with them—where the day never comes night—
Gone where the beautiful angels crown them with diadems bright.

Just over yon, by the hillside, rises the last mound of all;
Livingston sleeps there unmindful; heedless of becon or call.
But angels have told the whole story—told all that loving ones can,
When they traced, there on the greensward—"Here lies a soldier and man."

So give all praise to these dead ones—honor that never shall die;
Glorious songs that shall echo up to their homes in the sky;
And they will hear them and answer; See! they are listening now—
Each with a heavenly laurel crowning his radiant brow.

Brave heroes, still, but no longer blackened, and bloody, and dead;
All have been washed in life's River, whether they followed or led;
Bright angels kissed the hod tear drops, back from their fixed, glassy eyes,
God turned the body to ashes, bidding the souls to arise.

Glory for aye, for these soldiers; gallant, and noble and true;
Cover them over with blossoms, dripping with Heaven's own dew;
They are the martyrs to Freedom; their's are names that shall live
When time and tempest have faded all the bright flowers we give.

No, we shall never forget them; and, when the closing tattoo,
Beats the last summons to quarters, then will these brave boys in Blue
Signal the guards at the gateways op'ning to realms of the blest
To pass us in There, where our spirits, will share in their rapture and rest.

The Irrepressible Small Boy.

A little boy was reading in the bible about a woman who married seven brothers. "Oh, mamma," he exclaimed, "did she marry them all at once?" "No, darling," replied his mother; "she married one, and when he died she married another. What would you think, Bobby, if I should marry seven brothers?" "It's hard to tell, mamma, [illegible]

THE PROPER THING.

Dotted stuffs are very fashionable.

Big buttons are a feature on summer frocks.

The straight bang is the best for warm weather.

All sleeves are loose above the elbow this season.

Black and white toilets grow in favor as the season advances.

Checked surahs and checked taffeta silks are pretty for young girls.

The parasol or en-tout-cas must correspond with the dress this summer.

Open work and lace tissues are largely utilized for midsummer wraps.

Bustles grow larger, but in better form and more compressible and elastic.

Jet belts will be worn with white frocks and also with black and white toilets.

Long wraps will not be worn any more until October, except by elderly women.

Until midsummer wraps made of the material of the dress will be the preferred wear.

There is no end to the variety in hats, their brims, crowns and trimmings this summer.

Bluish, greenish, and pinkish grays are much in favor both for dresses and household decorations.

Bonnets are perched higher on the head, while the trimmings are piled in front more than ever.

Cuirasses made entirely of open head embroidery will take the place of dressy wraps in midsummer.

The mania for tight sleeves is over. The waist is the objective point of the tight squeeze in dress now.

Bustles are so big they make dresses shorter in the back. Not a pretty style but it is a fact for all that.

The mutton-leg sleeve, tight to the elbow and puffed above to the shoulder seam or armhole, grows in favor.

The ribbons and flowers worn with a white or cream lace toilet should always correspond with the color of silk slip worn under it.

Tufts of feather are worn with and used for the loopings of spring and summer ball dresses of lace and gauze, but flowers are prettier.

Old-fashioned corn color is again in favor for summer frocks, or for ribbons and accessories of the toilet to be worn with white dress s.

English tailors' jackets are made very plain and very tight, but those of Pingut and Worth are made more loosely fitted, and are elaborately trimmed.

A Suspicious Livery Stable.

There is a livery stable keeper in Houston, Tex., who is very careful as to whom he hires his turnouts.

One Saturday afternoon a young married man called at the livery stable and wanted a horse and buggy.

"Who is going along with you?" asked the livery stable man.

"I'm going to take my wife's mother out for her health, and you can put a hatchet and spade in the bottom of the buggy, as I want to bring in some young cedar trees to plant out at the cemetery."

"My buggies are all engaged and if they were not you would have to pay $200 buggy hire for one afternoon."

"Why, how's that?"

"Because I don't want to be hauled up as a witness every time the court meets."

"Witness! About what?"

"And then you will be taking a change of venue because public sentiment is down on you here, and I don't want to be attached by the sheriff as a witness, travel forty miles and be fined $40 then be blackguarded by three or four lawyers."

"Why, what are you talking about?"

"That's all right. I don't say you ain't justified, but I ain't no fool. When a man wants to take his mother-in-law out in the country for her health, with a hatchet and spade, and talks about planting things in the cemetery, I know all I want to. My buggies are hired for year in advance. Just take your custom to some rival house. When I hire a buggy, I hire a buggy; and when I hire a hearse, I hire a hearse. I don't want to do any business what's not legitimate.—Texas Siftings.

The Steamer Great Eastern.

The construction commenced May 1, 1854, and the work of launching her, which lasted from November 3, 1857, to January 31, 1858, cost £60,000, hydraulic pressure being employed. Her extreme length is 680 feet, breadth 82½ feet, and and including paddle-boxes, 118 feet; height 58 feet or 70 feet to top of bulwarks. She has eight engines, capable in actual work of 11,000 horse-power, and has besides 20 auxiliary engines. She was sold in 1864 for £25,000 and was employed on several occasions with success as a cable-laying vessel. The Great Eastern was sold at public auction October 28, 1885, for $126,000.

Working Him Nicely.

"My dear," said a husband who is fond of putting posers, "can you tell me why young women who don't want to get married are like angels' visits?"

The lady finally gave it up.

"Because they are few and far between. Ha, ha, ha! Not bad eh?"

"Exceedingly clever. He, he, he! By the way John, can you let me have that $30?"

"Certainly said John.—New York Sun.

Rowell's Advertising Agency.

Messrs. George P. Rowell & Co., of New York, have just issued from their Advertising Agency in that city, a pamphlet in which they give appropriate places to 2,000 out of the 15,420 newspapers named in the last issue of the American Newspaper Directory, with the assurance that the selections made are sufficient for the wants of the most extensive advertiser. The experience of this firm, dating back for upwards of twenty years, enables it to form an accurate estimate of the relative value of a newspaper as an advertising medium. Certain it is that had not its business been so conducted that advertisers could reap the greatest return for their outlay, it would not in these days of competition and rivalry, have reached the position which it now holds. Just as the establishment of a a great News Bureau, with branches in every large city, has enabled the press of the country to supply simultaneously to every section the events of the whole world; so an advertising agency that is able to put its fingers upon the pulse of of every reputable newspaper and estimate its value must be of immense advantage, not only to advertisers but to newspapers themselves. The advertiser, even if he be hundreds of miles away from the city in which he wishes to make his wants known, can rest assured that through such a medium his enterprise will be misdirected, while, on the other hand, the newspaper is saved all risk of accepting something which might prove a monetary loss. The increase of business demands new and improved business methods, and the advantages of an advertising agency that knows exactly where to go and and how best to help its patrons cannot be over-estimated. Year by year business men, and in fact all who wish their wants made widely known, are getting farther away from the primitive and old-fashed ways of advertising, and are beginning to fully recognize that it is to the daily newspaper they must look for an adequate return for their outlay; and, therefore, any enterprise which lessens their labor, and assumes the responsibility of acting as their intelligent agent, must of necessity help to widen the field of business and industry. Mailed to any address for 30 cents.

Address, GEO. P. ROWELL & CO.
New York.

The Country Pastor.

The simple annals of a country pastor's daily life are uniform and uneventful, and afford little scope for the biographer's pencil. Interesting and precious as any work done on earth is in heaven's eyes, it is the obscurest possible in the world's regard. Angels look down upon it: busy, eager, bustling men heed it not. A calm routine of lowly though sacred duties, a constant, unvaried ministry of love, it flows on in a still and quiet stream, arresting no attention by its noise, and know only to the lowly homes it visits on its way, and the flowers and fields it waters. The parson of Dun was no exception to this. He preached the word; dispensed the sacred supper: warned the careless; comforted the sorrowing; baptized converts; blessed the union of young and loving hearts: visited the sick, the dying: buried the dead; whispered words of peace into the ear of mourners: carried to the poor widow and friendless orphan the charity of the church and his own: slipped softly into some happy home and gently broke the sad news of the sudden disaster far away: lifted up the fallen one from the ground, and pointed to Him who receiveth the publicans and the sinners—these things and such as these, he did in that little home-walk for twenty successive years, day by day: but that was all. There is much here for the records of the sky, but nothing, or next to nothing for the noisy annals of time.—The Pastor of Kilsyth.

Will be a Good Man.

John A. Logan, son of the late Seantor Logan, who a few weeks ago was married to Miss Andrews, daughter of Chauncey Andrews, the coal and iron king of Youngstown, Ohio, has returned from his honeymoon to the Everglades of Florida, and has buckled down to business in the active management of some coal lands which his father-in-law gave him on his wedding day. A gentleman from Ohio, now in this city, said he saw young Logan a few days ago in Youngstown, dressed in a garb similar to that of a miner, with trousers in his boots, flannel shirt, with a flaming blue necktie and a soft felt hat. He presented the appearance of an ambitious and prosperous young mechanic. He spends most of his time up at the mines, about fifty miles from Youngstown, where he superintends the business with great care and ability. Mr. Andrews is very proud of young Logan and believes he will become a successful coal operator. —N. Y. World.

A Run-away Train.

There is a story in the June Wide Awake of a boy, the fifteen-year-old son of a locomotive engineer, who had often ridden with his father and "knew the engine pooty well." Indeed the engineer had frequently let the boy "drive" on a long stretch of straight track."

One night he left "Dave" in charge of the engine on a siding while he went to supper as usual. There came a furious wind, and, after a little, some cars shot by without any engine. The wind had started them. Boy, think quick! Down grade! The Lightning Express is to come that way!

Nobody near. No telegraph wire. The trains are headed together. There is less than an hour to catch those run-away cars and pull them out of the way. No time for hesitation! He springs to the lever, picks up speed and tears away with grade and wind and steam like a whizzing arrow.

They are miles ahead. The rushing minutes are full of sudden comprehension. He almost sees through the dark, tempestuous night. What set him to thig plunge was thought of the Lightnign Express. Now danger takes hold of him. What if he is just too late! The run-away train is in sight! Off steam! On, on again! Let the story-teller tell the rest.

He must slow up, but do it so nicely that, when he does come up with them there shall be the least possible shock; for here is the hardest part of the business. He has nobody to help him "couple." He must be, for the once, both engineer and switchman. He had not thought what a formidable job this was until it stared him in the face.

On he flew revolving the situation in his head and adjusting the engine with the nicest care until he was on the very heels of the run-away; then, with many misgivings, slipped out of the engine house, and crawled along the side of the locomotive, and down on the "cow-catcher."

Here seizing the long coupler with one hand and holding on with the other, he stood watching with breathless interest the approaching collision. The suspense was agonizing. The situation was perilous. A gust of wind might sweep him from his place, he might be shaken off or crushed.

He was almost panic stricken. A dozen times he was at the point of turning back. To his startled ears the air was full of uncanny sounds—The sweep of another tornado, the rush of the "Lightning" just ahead. But he had in him the stuff of which heroes are made. The hero, remember, is not he who is insensible to danger, but rather he who feels and realize, but yet overcomes it.

The "Meteor" drew nearer and nearer the flying train. Dave had used excellent judgement in regulating its speed, for at length it came up with the rear car with scarcely a shock, so that Dave could reach over and drop in the pin.

Then clambering back into the engine-house with trembling eagerness he seizen the "throttle." To his amazement the train did not stop. Intead of the "Meteor's" stopping the run-away, the run-away dragged the "Meteor" along in its head-long flight. Dave was horror-struck. He had thought the train would stop at once. He had not calculated what a tremendous impetus all those heavy cars had attained.

Now, then, the tussle! The train began to slow up. It came to a stand-still, Then the backward pull. Slowly they got under way; but the wind and up-grade were against them.

Dave began to be anxious. "The Lightning" must be due by this time. He kept a sharp lookout behind and whistled like mad around the curves. At length he entered upon the long, straight level line of road which extended clear to Blankton. Dave breathed freer. It was the home-stretch—a good ten-mile run.

Hardly had he congratulated himself, when far behind—but unmistakably—he heard the scream of the "Lightning's" whistle. He was going already at his topmost speed. He was making not more than thirty-five miles an hour, while the "Lightning" was coming, on at the rate of sixty, With horror he heard it gaining on him; the next whistle was nearer, and at length when he had made only two-thirds the distance the gleam of its head-light came shooting around a wooded curve in his rear.

Out of the very despair of the moment Dave gathered calmness. He turned his back on the pursuing train, he cast no look behind, he shut his ears to its on-coming roar; looked straight ahead, kept his eye on the track, his mind on his duty.

He is almost there—he is there, he dashes past the station-house, across the switch, and down at last upon the side track.

It is all right. Jake and Jim are there. They have thrown the switch back in time; and the "Lightning" goes whizzing and shrieking past.

When Jake jumped aboard the "Meteor," his son fainted dead away in his arms,

Winchester, Va., 4,559 of whom 2,365 are unknown,

In all the remains of 300,000 men who fought for the Stars and Stripes find guarded graves in our national cemeteries. Two cemeteries are mainly devoted to the brave men who perished in lothsome prisons of the same name—Andersonville, Ga., which contains 13,714 graves, and Salisbury, with its 12,126 dead, of whom 12,032 are unknown.

The Projected Catholic University.

A prominent Roman Catholic priest, in commenting upon the establishment of the proposed university at Washington, says that there is no qustion as to money. He says: "The splendid gift of Miss Caldwell, $300,000, was the beginning of a series of donations that now aggregate $750,000. This will do to begin with. We expect the university properly organized, with competent teachers and tutors, to whom the salaries necessary to obtain the best ability will be paid, will represent an expenditure of at least $5,000,000. Of this amount we have in hand nearly one-fifth. How will we obtain the rest? I'll give you a hint. There are 8,250,000 Roman Catholics in the United States, according to our own information. We pay no attention to the census, for we know exactly how many members we have, just as an army commander can tell what his available force is from the morning reports of his subordinate officers. Twenty-five cents a year from one-half of these would be over $1,000,000. We can get the money when we want it.

The Oldest Weather Vane.

The city of Albany claims to possess the oldest weather-vane in the United States. It is known to have surmounted the steeple of a Dutch church by the Hudson riverside so long ago as 1656. This church was situated at the foot of State street (the broad avenue that leads down the hill eastward from the state capitol), and was demolished in 1806. The vane then, was stored in the vault of the Patroons," from which it was extricated a month or two ago, and after being gilded was set on another steeple in a different part of the city last week. it is a brass rooster.—New York Telegram.

Modern needles came in to use in 1545.

Women's Work.

"Men work from morn till set of sun.'
They do.
"But woman's work is never done."
Quite true.
For when one task she's finished, something's found.
Awaiting a beginning, all year round,
Whether it be,
To draw the tea.
Or make the bed.
Or ply the broom.
Or dust the room
Or floor to scrub.
Or knives to rub.
Or table to set.
Or meals to get.
Or shelves to scan.
Or fruit to can.
Or seeds to sow.
Or plants to grow.
Or linens bleach.
Or butter churn.
Or jackets turn.
Or polish glass.
Or plate of brass.
Or clothes to mend.
Or children tend.
Or notes indite
Or stories write.
But I must stop, for really if I should,
Name all the oars, take me a day it would,
So many are there that I do declare,
More boats than I could count might have a pair.
And yet enough be left; and, men folks these Same oars propel your bark o'er household seas,
Into sunny havens where you rest at ease,
And one word more, don't forget it, please.

A WORD WITH YOU.

BANGOR, MAINE, SPRING, 1887.

Preparatory to what follows, we will say that realizing the great work of healing upon which we have entered, that nothing may be set down to quackery or ignorance, we have prepared a short history of the professional life of W. H. BROWN, M. D., from whose formula we have for years prepared the most successful medicine for purifying and enriching the blood, inciting the torpid liver, and strengthening weak kidneys, —in short, for the speedy, safe and permanent cure of all diseases of the stomach, liver, and kidneys, that has ever been known in New England. This history, together with statements from many prominent people whom you will know, of relief secured and cures effected from sufferings and torture by these diseases, will be mailed to you if you send us your address. Better that in this letter we tell you where relief can be found. We have come late to the work with BROWN'S SARSAPARILLA. Naturally we have taken hold of the cases which other remedies, altho' advertised with persistency and at marvelous expense, have failed to cure. The results have been wonderful. Nowhere have we failed to give relief, and in no case where persistent and faithful use according to directions has been made of Brown's Sarsaparilla, has it failed to CURE any or all diseases of the blood, stomach, liver, and kidneys Mrs. Ephraim Cunningham of East Bangor, Maine, heard of it, read of it, tried it, and was cured of her weakness in kidneys and troubled liver. Carlton P. Williams of Amesbury, Mass., says he is entirely cured of what physicians diagnosticated as Bright's disease, and pronounced incurable. Eben Morrison of Cleveland, Ohio, advised by a friend to use Brown's Sarsaparilly for his kidney troubles, did so and was cured. Benj. Hill of New York Corner, at 63 years of age, gained strength and vitality for his blood, and health to continue his daily duties. Tumors dispursed for Reuben Severance and Aaron French by Brown's Sarsaparilla. Scrofula cured in Hartley B. Fisher, Corinna, Me. But why continue? Get our book on good health and read for yourself the astounding results secured by the use of Brown's Sarsaparilla, and remember these cases are those where eminent physicians have failed to find a remedy, and other medicines, advertise well and popularly introduced, have not benefitted, but Brown's Sarsaparilla, having been taken as a last resort, has proved efficacious and no other treatment was needed. Now with these facts in evidence, substantiated by reputable citizens accompanied by affidavits of prominent people, why not make this remedy the first, as it will then prove to you the only resort when you, your family or your neighbors are suffering from any of the almost numberless disorders which arise from a deranged stomach, and inactive liver, or weakened kidneys? Now a word in regard to the preparation and combination of this wonderful remedy. Our Mr. Warren for many years enjoyed the confidence of the late W. H. Brown, M. D., and in the prosecution of his business of pharmacist hundreds of times has he been called upon to put up the prescription, which is now compounded for popular sale, and for a few years has been known to the public as Brown's Sarsaparilla. It is entirely vegetable in its combination; the most powerful alterative-tonic properties known to the materia medica being skillfully prepared on a scientific basis, and the result of a perfect medicine for the relief and cure of dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation, biliousness, loss of appetite, inflammation of kidneys and bladder, Bright's disease, dropsy, gravel, jaundice, heartburn, rheumatism, neuralgia, scrofula, erysipelas, salt rheum, diabetes; for the removal of impurities of the blood; to incite to proper activity the sluggish torpid liver; and to strengthen and relieve disorders of the stomach. It also acts like a charm as a remedy for all female complaints. Brown's Sarsaparilla has such curative powers and is of such immeasurable value to sufferers that we have decided to commence the publication of a series of extensive articles, detailing its properties uses and cures; and hereafter you can receive such information from the columns of this paper. You can obtain the medicine of any dealer. Yours truly, ARA WARREN & CO.

JAS. R. FAIRGRIEVE - EDITOR

The Patriot again foams at our position in regard to the water question. We would like to believe that the editor thinks what he says, but we cannot. It is so natural for him to get on the other side of the fence and fire, that he does it regardless of right or wrong. The questions for which he demands answers, we were in hopes that the committee of Trustees would investigate and satisfy themselves before we made them public. They are:

> "Is there any good reason why Oswego Falls should get water for $40 per hydrant and Fulton be obliged to pay $50 per hydrant? Does THE TIMES favor that?
>
> Cortland pays $33.33 per hydrant. Is there any good reason Fulton and Oswego Falls should pay more than Cortland?
>
> Newark pays $29 per hydrant for 69 hydrants. Is there any reason why Fulton and Oswego Falls should not have 80 hydrants for the same price. Or if they should be willing to pay $35 per hydrant, is there any good reason why the Water Company should refuse it at that price?"

FIRST, Fulton, during the term of its contract had the privilege of adding any number of hydrants on the present mains without increasing its annual payment. Had it done so, the situation and annual rental per hydrant might have been identical with that of Newark, so often quoted by by the Patriot.

THE TIMES does not favor this village paying more proportionally for its water service than Oswego Falls, nor than other villages similarly situated. Neither does it seek to strengthen its arguments by citing certain parts of contracts in other villages, leaving out those that fail to serve its purpose.

SECOND. Cortland has 120 hydrants, a population of 5,500 by the last census and less miles of mains than Fulton, and pays $4,000 or $33.33 per hydrant. We understand that if Fulton will put in the same number of hydrants, the Water Company will supply them at less than $30 per hydrant.

THIRD. Newark has a population of 2,600 and a much less number of miles of mains than Fulton and pays $29 per hydrant for 69 hydrants. Fulton has double the population and double the length of mains, consequently should have 138 hydrants, which we understand that the Water Works Company would furnish at less than $25 per hydrant.

Why will not the Patriot be honest and state the whole truth and not try to mislead the public?

HON. WILLIAM A. WHEELER, Vice-President of the United States from 1877 to 1881 died at his home in Malone, Franklin county, on Saturday last aged sixty-eight years. He retired to his home as soon as his term at Washington had expired, withdrawing entirely from public life. He had long been in failing health with little hope of permanent recovery. Hon. R. B. Hayes, who was president during the same term attended the funeral which was held yesterday afternoon.

PROF. BALDWIN of this town who has been for the past few years principal of the Union school at Philadelphia, Jefferson county, announces that he is a candidate for school commissioner of this district. In ending the report of the Teachers' Institute recently held, the Monitor of that village has the following concerning his school:

> "We are sure it will be gratifying to the citizens of Philadelphia if, in closing this notice of the association of teachers, we allude to the good impression which the Philadelphia school has made upon the numerous visiting teachers. Its pupils have done well, whenever called out in classes for model recitations before the association. Commissioner Shaver assures us that it is one of the very best schools in the county. Its condition certainly reflects credit upon its teachers. State Superintendent Draper, visiting this school the past winter, unexpectedly and incognito, made a like felicitous report at a subsequent meeting of school principals at Potsdam. We congratulate Philadelphia upon its union school, and in its fortunate selection of teachers.

Cheese Market.

[From the Utica Herald].

AT UTICA.

UTICA, N. Y. June 6.

A larger number of salesmen attended the board of trade to-day than on any other day this year. Everybody felt good, for the make of cheese is large and prices are satisfactory. Pastures are now growing splendidly, and the cattle are just about coming into the flush of milk. The market was active, starting at 9¼c., and gradually creeping up to 9¾@9⅞c. for the best goods. Considering the condition of the New York market, it is believed that cheese sold here quite as high as it ought, to-day. A 10c. market is predicted before the close of the week in New York. If it happens the cheese bought here will make no money this week. Sales were well distributed among the buyers, each having his regular quota, and the bulk of cheese was sold at a price, only one-seventh of the offering being sent on commission. The cheese at 10c. were small sized. Transactions of the day were:

AT FULTON.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, June 8, 1887.

It does not require an extended absence from this city to note the unprecedent march of improvement everywhere to the casual observer. Public works vie with private enterprise in the adornment of the Capital.

The clean, smooth streets, embowered with luxuriant shade trees, with here and there a beautiful park to relieve the monotony; these being ornamented by either a statue in bronze or marble, a fountain, or tastefully arranged beds of coleitor flowers; while on every side architectural skill exerts itself in reproducing facsimilies of classical and mediaval art, and of the modern renaissance, in the mansions of the rich, and the less pretentious, but none the less charming dwellings of the man of moderate means, altogether compose an entrancing picture.

Localities that we were accustomed to associate with dreary wastes of common, and stagnant pools, given over to the frolicksome antics of the frisky goat, and the dignified waddle of the more sedate gander, who contested the right of occupancy with the ever present hoopskirt and tomato can; these uninspiring spots are now transformed into beautiful rows of aesthetically designed houses, or more picturesque cottages with pretty landscape effects. Thus the cultivation of the beautiful is proved to keep pace with the true and the good in our domestic environment.

With each year the number of pilgrims to this Mecca of America increases; at first the happy bridal couple, inspired by the promptings of the little god, came; next, the prim teacher with her following of merry school girls, the former bent solely upon the search for mental pabulum for her charming brood, the last, perhaps, dividing this most commendable pursuit with a determination to have a real good time. After awhile the wealthy class of leisure and culture made the discovery that it was the proper thing to do to pay a visit to the social as well as the political centre, before the final departure for the summer to the seaside or mountain resort. And so the isolated excursion party develop into the social custom, and it has, at length, become fashionable for Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, and Boston, and even Chicago to send yearly their quota to this attractive resort for wealth, intelligence, and refinement.

The want of proper conception, in the average tourist, of the operations of this gigantic government is very apparent. The several departments which are but the vast counting houses of the nation, are a never ending source of wonderment to uninitiated. What so many people find to do, and they certainly do have the appearance of being busily engaged at something, is the first thing that impresses a stranger.

Multiply the force employed by any of our largest business establishments by a number which will represent the greater extent of the Government's transactions as compared with those of the private business house, and you will form an approximate idea of the needs of the service.

An illustration of the point referred to was given during the late National Drill week, as related by an employe of the Navy Department. A party of visitors of apparently more than ordinary intelligence, led by a lady who was also spokeswoman, came to one of the offices of the Paymaster General of the Navy, who is Chief of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, and asked the clerk in charge to explain to them just what was done there; and how it was done. "For," said the lady mentioned, "I sometimes write for the newspapers, and I want to be able to say that I've been everywhere, and seen everything, and I may write you up too." When informed that this Bureau combined what were three distinct offices in the Army, viz: those of the Quartermaster General, the Commissary of Subsistance and of the Paymaster General; and that they supplied Uncle Sam's sailors with rations, wearing apparel, tobacco, and many other necessary articles, her interest was awakened, and after explaining it all to her party, she eagerly queried, "And would it be too much trouble for you to show us these things, and the nature of the food that is supplied the Navy?"

When it was told her that the Naval Storehouses were not there, but that they were distributed about at the several Navy Yards and Stations on our coast, and that the immense building contained only book-keepers and accountants, she was greatly disappointed, and said she "always thought that the ships came to Washington and drew their supplies from the Navy Department, which was a sort of central depot. Her interest having so evidently abated, she was considerately directed to the Army Museum, where object lessons in abundance would be afforded.

Don't miss those bargains next week at ½ regular prices (only during lamp week) at Draper's, No. 6, First St.

Before buying your winter coal take the trouble to compare Scranton with other grades and see its superiority over any other in the market.

It often occurs that when a bill for subscription is presented the party claims that the date to which the subscription is paid is not correct. There is no reason for these persons making such a claim. The tags attached to each paper contains the name of the subscriber and the date at which their subscription runs out. If any error exists in this date the proper thing for a subscriber to do is to drop a postal to THE TIMES or call at the office and have it rectified.

A [illegible] of teachers' [illegible] Friday. The teachers of this district and commissioner announced themselves as well pleased with the work done. On Thursday Prof. Albro gave instruction on Normal Methods; Miss Walter in Advanced Work in Geography and Miss Smith in Language. In the evening Rev. W. D. Chase gave his lecture, "Colorado, What I Said to Me and What I Saw" to an appreciative audience. On Friday, Miss Smith resumed the talk of the preceding day and also talked on the subject of spelling. Prof. Albro resumed his subject of memory and later with the assistance of 18 teachers selected by Com. Metcalf illustrated his method of operation in arithmetic. As the hours of the institute were drawing to a close, David Clark, as chairman of com. on necrology, previously appointed reported as follows:

It having pleased the all wise Creator to remove from among us a brother and sister in the profession,

Therefore, Resolved, That in the death of Isaac F. Pierce, we lose one of our earnest early educators who gave his best energies to do the work of teaching and who merited the name of an honest, earnest and faithful teacher and man, and that we tender to his friends our sympathy in their bereavement.

Resolved, That in the removal of our much loved sister, Nellie Whitney, we have sustained much loss and feel much sadness as one feels when a most beautiful flower in his garden is snapped from its stalk by a cold east wind leaving a vacant spot not to be filled. That the light of a home has gone out, that a dear friend, faithful teacher and loving sister has gone from the labor of teaching others to the reward of sitting at the feet and learning of Him who taught as never man taught, and that we extend to her parents and friends the sympathy of hearts that having known the shadow can feel their loss.

Resolved, That a copy of the resolutions be sent to the friends of the deceased. The report was adopted.

Ira Mehegan from the committee on resolutions reported as follows:

We, the teachers of the first commissioner's district, Oswego county, appreciating the favor extended to us by Hon. A. S. Draper, state superintendent of public instruction, in coming to Fulton and imparting to us the valuable information which his speech on Monday evening, May 30, contained; Have Resolved:

That a vote of thanks be extended to him for kindly attending our institute and that we pledge ourselves, as teachers, of this district to uphold and carry out as far as possible his ideas, imparted to us on that occasion.

Resolved, That we, the teachers of this institute, do tender our sincere thanks to the people of Fulton for their painstaking in entertaining us, and to the electric light company for courtesy in showing their works.

Resolved, That Prof. Gilbert and Prof. Cooper and those associated with them are entitled to our thanks for their fine music which has so much contributed to make our institute interesting and pleasant.

Resolved, That we extend to Prof. Hoose, Dr. Mary Lee, Rev. W. Dempsker Chase and Prof. Albro our thanks for their kindness in giving us such able and instructive lectures.

Resolved, That we extend our sincere thanks to Com. Metcalf for his untiring efforts in our behalf in raising the standard of school work and endeavoring to secure better professional training for teachers, also his zeal in securing the cooperation of the people in our work by town associations, and trustee meetings which have been held in every town with great success.

Prof. Clapp moved to amend by adding a resolutions of thanks to Misses Walter and Smith and also Prof. Albro for the valuable work they have done here, and said in offering this that he wished to put himself on record as being satisfied with the result of this institute, and he believed all his teachers were. The commissioner then explained why the conductor had not for some years been given a vote of thanks, but said he was very glad Prof. Clapp had offered this amendment as he believed it was deserved as an exceptional case. With this addition the resolutions were without dissent adopted.

Rev. Mr. Chase, Commissioner Cole and Rev. Mr. Palmer made short but telling speeches. The conductor and commissioner made very appropriate remarks. The doxology was sung and the benediction was pronounced by Rev. Mr. Chase and then, as by common consent, there was adjourned the most profitable and pleasant institute ever held in this part of Oswego county.

The evening closed worthy of the occasion. The crowd attending Prof. Albro's lecture was immense, so that notwithstanding the capacity of the large opera house many had to go away. The lecture was intensely interesting to the last and held such attention, considering the vast audience, as is rarely seen.

The illustrations were beautiful, the descriptions clear and instructive and at the close, applause came voluntarily from the whole throng as testimony that they had been entertained and benefitted.

Mr. Beecher's Biography.

The Rev. Mr. Halliday, Mr. Beecher's assistant in Plymouth church, has been associated with Lyman Abbott, D. D., in the preparation of the biography of the late Mr. Beecher, to which the great preacher, previous to his death, largely contributed. It was not proposed to have either Mr. Halliday's or Mr. Beecher's connection with the book generally known, but the death of Mr. Beecher has removed the objection to the fact being made public, and now the complete book will appear with both Dr. Lyman Abbott's and Rev. S. B. Halliday's name on the title page, who are better fitted to write such a work than any other living persons. They have also been assisted by a corps of over thirty eminent writers, Leonard Bacon, D.D., J. G. Whittier and others, who have contributed reminiscences, etc. As Mr. Beecher did not write a line upon any autobiography of himself, but did contribute to this work, the additional fact is apparent that Dr. Abbott's and Rev. Halliday's book is the nearest approach to an autobiography that Mr. Beecher has left, and with the array of talent employed it looks as if we were to have a biography worthy of the man, and will prove a valuable addition to any library.

The work is being sold by subscription by the American Publishing Co., of Hartford, Conn., and Mr. C. A. Lewis is now canvassing this section for subscribers for Mr. O. M. Bond of Oswego, who is the only authorized agent in Oswego county.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL'S., Sept. 18, 1882.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O.: Have taken Hall's Catarrh Cure; am [illegible] years old. Had asthma 19 years, and a dreadful cough for five years. Have taken everything, went to the Hot Springs; have doctored with the doctors here; I have done nothing but take medicine for 19 years. When I commenced taking Hall's Catarrh Cure I was almost dead. I sent for the doctor the day I got Hall's Catarrh Cure, and I told him that I would die anyway and that I would try your medicine. I was very bad. How I suffered for 9 years! I could hardly breathe at times. I saw Hall's Catarrh Cure advertised in the papers and commenced taking it, I would have been under the ground to-day if it had not been for that. I have not had one bad spell of coughing since. In breathing my head feels well and I am well. It has done me a thousand dollars worth of good. There are ten of my friends, on seeing what it had done for me, taking it, and it is helping them. I only wish that everyone who has catarrh, asthma and a bad cough could see me, so that I could tell them all to take it. All that know me here know how I have suffered. (I have been here since 1858,) and say to me that "I am so glad you found something that could cure you." Everyone said, "how much better you look." The doctors say they are glad I found Hall's Ctaarrh Cure as the could not cure me.

I cannot express my gratitude to you for the good Hall's Catarrh Cure has done me. You can use as much of this letter as will do the afflicted good. Publish to the whole world—it is all true and they should know it.

Three fires have occurred since January 1st. At the Dilts fire a number were present before the engines came. Several state that at least ten minutes elapsed from the time the hose was in position to play upon the fire, to the time the engines were ready to throw water. One states positively that at the time the hose boys reached the scene, the fire did not seem to occupy a space of over four feet and could have been easily put out, if the hydrants could have been opened, and that five minutes later the fire had spread beyond control.

At the fire on Second street near the Free Methodist church it was over twenty minutes from the time the engines left the house until they were throwing streams and it was fifteen minutes from the time hose was stretched until water was thrown. Many in the large crowd present looked towards the hydrants, timed the wait for water and expected every instant to see Mr. Chubb's house blaze up. A little breeze in either direction and one of the adjoining houses would have had to burn.

At the factory fire ten minutes elapsed from the time our hose was stretched until the engines were ready to throw streams.

At the burning of the Townsend house and barnes, competent and undisputed authority states that if the hydrants had been opened the fire could have been put out without great damage to the house or furniture and both barns saved. In this case, too, the hose carts were there in good time and had to wait the arrival of the steamers. In each of these instances the winds were tempered for the occasion but we cannot always expect to be favored by the sleep of the breezes that blow. Let us consider

THE ELEMENT OF DANGER.

At the Second street fire a slight breeze to the north or south would have burned two other houses. At the Harvey Townsend fire a slight breeze to the east, west, north or southeast would have burned several fine residences. With the air as it were perfectly dead, the [illegible] house next adjoining on the northwest barely escaped. With a strong breeze at that time who can estimate what would have been the destruction of property. As it was, one engine was disabled. The water supply gave out and the other engine had to pump water from the cistern and stop throwing water on the fire for a time. This leads to the question

WHEN IS WATER MOST NEEDED?

When the fire starts, to put it out or confine it is essential. After a fire is under good headway, a lapse of fifteen minutes before water is turned on is almost sure to cause the total destruction of a frame building or the gutting of a brick building. But aside from the destruction of buildings a fire that has gained such headway puts contiguous [illegible] in [illegible] destruction. The quantity of water that is required to [illegible] are [illegible] greatly [illegible] when the hose is first stretched, owing to the difference in time and the spread of fire, let alone the question of partial or total destruction of the building and the danger to other property.

OUR LOSS.

As a result of trusting to old time fire protection and closing the hydrants, we have seen burned the Harvey Townsend residence where has been one of the fine residences of Fulton and see now an unsightly ruin.

By the Dilts fire many workmen were compelled to suffer idleness for a time and the loss to Mr. Dilts was great. At the very lowest estimate it can be said that by failure to use the hydrants at these two fires, [illegible] other citizens lost $1,000, [illegible] to pay for the hydrants two years. Every dollar's worth of property [illegible] destroyed takes out just that amount of money from circulation in the village. Fulton is not a rich village and she needs to save every penny. It is a short sighted policy for a village to see its citizens put their hard earned money into houses and business and then permit them to be crippled by burning when they could be saved. Another thing: We presume that the property on which the buildings were burned, will this year be assessed at several thousand dollars less in valuation. We thus lose in taxes. Instead of destroying taxable property, we should preserve and increase the amount of such property and thus lighten each ones burden. There are several buildings in Fulton that are heavily taxed, which if we allowed them to burn, would doubtless never be rebuilt, and we would lose their taxes, to wit: the Nelson mill, and saw mill with sheds, the seminary, and the C. G. Case residence. We have lost much this year and are not now protected.

WHERE IS THE FAULT?

The Water Co. have invited investigation of the cost of their plant, of their books, of the manner of building and of everything connected with its history. They have endeavored to get village officers or even individuals to examine and say what would be a fair price for water, but without avail. Certain citizens have said the price should be this or that, and asked upon what they based their figures, they have no reply. Is this fair? It would certainly be wise if some of our citizens, opponents of the water system, if you please, but fair minded, would investigate and state to the public the result of their investigation. It is time some one comes to the front and if the Water Co. is a soulless corporation trying to cripple the village and make itself rich by taxing us, expose them, but give them an honest investigation.

On Monday the will of the late Samuel N. Kenyon was proved before Surrogate David in Phoenix. It is understood he leaves his entire fortune of some $75,000 to his widow, to be equally divided among the heirs after her death.

The marriage of Mr. Francis Hoff of Buffalo and Miss Katie Hoff of this village occurred at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Hoff last Thursday afternoon. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Carl Stone.

This morning three old gentlemen chanced to meet in front of C. P. Tucker's grocery store whose combined ages were [illegible] years. They were Freeman Gasper 86, [illegible] Everts 92, and Erastus P[illegible] [illegible]. All are enjoying good health and are as hale and hearty as could be expected.

Rev. Willard Parsons, manager of the N. Y. Tribune Fresh Air Fund was in town last Thursday making preparation for the reception of some of the tenement house children of New York city in this village during the month of July or August. The matter has been left in the hands of the local pastors.

Rice's advertising car was in Fulton Friday billing the town for a circus to be held on June 14th. It is considered a good show, and they advertise some very attractive novelties. Fulton is one of the best places in the world to come to circuses, and every man, women and child should make it a point to come to town upon that day.

Arrangements are being perfected by the Oswego Falls brass band to make things lively at the fair ground on "the ever glorious" the Observer announces that a $50 prize for a band contest will be given, $20 for hose race, $15 for ball game. All the societies of Fulton and Oswego Falls are expected to parade. The committee of arrangements are: Willis Baker, Willie Brown, Archie Somers, Edward Baldwin; Finance Com: I. E. Markland, H. Hudgins, E. Baldwin, C. Hudgins.

The High Arm Singer machine is having a great sale everywhere. The reasons are: It runs easy, is noiseless, does all kinds of work in the best manner and the price is very low.

The Willard-French Nuptials.

The marriage of Mr. J. Frank Willard, head bookkeeper and paymaster in the Riverside & Oswego Mills and Miss May L. French occurs at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin H. French on First street, at four o'clock this afternoon.

This marriage has been the chief topic of conversation for some time past, the contracting parties being well and favorably known in this locality where they have passed their lives and are of high social standing. Our report must of necessity be incomplete but we present to the readers of THE TIMES a report containing all the information of this brilliant affair that we could obtain at this early hour.

Down With a Crash.

Persons in the neighborhood of the canal bridge which leads to the box factory of Herrick & Emerick, were startled last Thursday forenoon about nine o'clock by hearing a terrible crash. It was soon discovered that the bridge had gone down and with it a pair of horses with an empty wagon which contained L. B. Rowlee and his son Fred, and a single horse before a wagon heavily loaded with lumber driven by Albert Barnes. Those first to arrive saw all of these in a confused mass among the debris, struggling to extricate themselves. As soon as the men recovered from the shock occasioned by their sixteen feet fall, and began to realize that they were not killed outright they started to rescue the struggling horses assisted by ready hands. In an incredable short time hundreds had collected on the banks of the canal, 99 per cent of whom were giving orders as to what should be done. After considerable trouble, attended by no little danger the harness was cut and the horses one by one were taken down the stream and landed in an exhausted condition. The The escape of men and horses with scarcely a bruise was miraculous. The bridge wreck was cleared up before noon and work in the box factory continued without intermission, the lumber being carried to the factory by a canal boat and the shooks carted away over the heel path. A gang of men are now at work removing the remnant of the old bridge and a new iron one will probably soon be constructed.

Accident on the Midland.

Ten cars on the frieght and coal train which passed through here shortly after midnight going north Friday night, jumped the track a short distance from Black Creek, about two and one-half miles down the river. The train consisted of 30 cars which were loaded with merchandise and coal. Quite a little of the track was torn up and the derailed cars badly crushed and their contents scattered. No one was injured by the accident. A wrecking train was soon at the scene. Saturday morning trains on the road were delayed about four hours.

A Man Got Shot! A Man Got Shot!

Was the expression that caused about everyone on East Bridge street, Oswego to rush to the door and ask how and where. A reporter and policeman soon followed up and ferreted out the matter and found that a young man from the country had stepped into a hardware store and got shot—one pound and paid for them. Then hurried right along to Merriam & Sibbitt to buy one of those rich gold hanging lamps for $4.25 and an elegant $1.98 decorated chamber set.

The Philadelphia Telegram contains the following concerning Rice's circus which is to exhibit here on Tuesday, June 14th:

"Large crowds of people are being attracted to Rice's circus, at Broad and Dickinson streets, the combination of the '50 cents admission,' with a real first-class show, being the groundwork for its popularity. Last evening the canvas was not large enough to cover the throng, but arrangements have now been made to accommodate all who are looking for a good night's entertainment in a single ring, at a price within the reach of everybody."

NEW YORK LETTER.

William O'Brien and His Two Kind Friends—How He Neglected the Workingmen—The Stewart Will Contest—The Hotel Keepers and the Sunday Laws—A Grand Cathedral for the Episcopalian Church Projected—What It Will Cost—No Jury Yet in Sharp's Trial—Embracery Changed by the District Attorney.

[Special to THE TIMES].

The shrewdness and cunning of a Tammany politician is past finding out. If there be one class of men above all others who can scent danger from afar and in a measure prepare to avert the direful consequences, that class is the noble order of Tammany. Why? Well here's the story.

William O'Brien, whose escapades and thrilling experiences at the hands of Canadian mobs have given his name a national reputation arrived here last week. Of course the very general feeling that prevails here commendatory of Home Rule on the other side of the Ocean found an expression in a very enthusiastic meeting at the Academy of Music. But on Saturday night another demonstration in his favor, involving a parade and mass meeting in Union Square took place.

This manifestation of favor was projected by the Central Labor Union, the representative body of the trades, societies and K. of L. The idea was to make it a workingmen's tribute to O'Brien's pluck in general and to Home Rule in particular. But the Central Labor Union is in a very large measure the Labor Party of this city, so that this demonstration might by some, be regarded as giving a further impetus to the doctrines of Henry George and to the cause of the deposed priest McGlynn. The Tammany chieftains found it to their purpose to so represent the case to O'Brien. The result was that O'Brien refused to appear on the reviewing stand and the mass-meeting in his favor heard no speech from him. On the contrary, before these facts became known, as they speedily did, the general tenor of the meeting was turned from a commendatory tone to that of strong denunciation of O'Brien's subserviency to other counsels than who might with some reason in this case be expected to have the right to forgive them.

This little sensation has made a strong sensation among the workingmen as it has also made some quite funny complications.

The meeting at the Academy was a very enthusiastic one. O'Brien himself has the measure of a man thoroughly in earnest. He is a man of medium height, sparely built, but energetic, muscular, wiry. His face is decidedly Celtic; high forehead and pointed chin. A pair of sharp, twinkling, expressive eyes look upon the world through gold spectacles. His voice is well adapted for public speaking and his platform appearance is that of one with a message to deliver full of things that must be said and well said. One sees in O'Brien a dogged pertinacity, an undaunted courage, and a commendable firmness. It is unfortunate that any unpleasant circumstance should have happened.

It is to be regretted that knowing, as he must have known, the unfortunate controversies in matters of faith now raging here, he did not avoid the rock that has wrecked many a better man.

⁂

We have no surprise to express upon the possibly long and expensive litigation which the suit of Prescott Beecher against the executors of Mrs. A. T. Stewart's estate portends. Mr. Butler married the grand niece of Mrs. Stewart and while so far as the share of this world's goods from the estate is concerned he has no cause for complaint, yet there is to the casual observer and hence no doubt, to the employed legal talent of this city, strong grounds for a charge of undue influence by Judge Hilton. The bone of contention seems to be whether a certain residence to be created as a trust is in accordance with existing law. Mr. Butler whose wife received during the life time of Mrs. Stewart a beautiful residence opposite the Mansion on Fifth avenue, worth upwards of a half-million, besides a yearly sum of $10,000 and $200,000 by will, whose sons received $15,000 and who himself was left $50,000, would in the event of a successful issue of his present suit receive more than a million. But it must be kept in mind that Mr. Stewart had Judge Hilton as his confidential adviser and confidential friend for more than a score of years. His natural judgment of men and things would lead him to advise his wife to seek his friend's advice after his death. He knew thoroughly well that the business capacity of his wife, her strong tact and financial management would prevent her from being so far guided by Judge Hilton's advice as to lose what she regarded as the best end of the bargain. However, these is no doubt that Mrs. Stewart deferred to the Judge's advice, but it is hardly possible she did so solely, as claimed by Mr. Butler, through his own mental weakness and incapacity. This fact has been true for years that a fair share of her accumulations supported a large number of her relatives among whom is a young man, now in the service of the United States, who received his military education in Europe and by the influence, political of course, of his family obtained a position in the United States Army. The whole question so far as we understand it, turns upon the legality of the truth. Even Tilden's idea in this direction is not respected, and the same sort of a contest is now raised regarding that. The lawyer who can write a will that the combined legal lore of the nation would regard as positively and absolutely uncontestible would have a mass of work he would not be able to subdue in a life time.

The Mayor's action in closing the liquor stores on Sunday is of course not received with favor. His instructions to the Public Board and the subsequent opinion of the Corporation Attorney, touching the relation the hotel keepers sustain under the law has caused a rather peculiar condition of things.

The guests at a hotel, and the regular dinners at the restaurants are denied their accustomed wines. There is a strong probability that a friendly contest will ensure touching the true incident of the Legislature. Such a state of things produce less lawlessness on the Sabbath. The railroads and steam boats reap the benefit in taking the thirsty ones to adjacent places within and without the state where wet goods are obtainable. The end of all this is not yet.

The Episcopal church is just now busy discussing the plan of building a monster cathedral, free to all, that shall be a monument of architectural beauty, massive proportions and stupendous magnificence, worthy this great city. The special impetus that has launched this plan in a nooked codicil to Miss Miss Wolfe's will in which she left $1,000,000 for such a purpose.

The cost of this new structure is placed at ten 'millions. Land has already been selected on the high ground of the city in the neighborhood of 90th street and 4th avenue. Two city blocks of land have been picked out and this tract of about 4 acres is to be covered with the cathedral. The wisdom of sinking in a building so large a sum as ten millions is a question upon the merits of which deponent sayeth nothing; but this remark might be made in passing that so enormous a sum might be made available of more good than merely to be looked at and admired in cold marble or stately granite. If our Episcopalian friends could be as fortunate as our Catholic ones, who secured their land for a 999 years' term at $1 per year, it would be pleasant indeed; but the sum of three-quarters of a million is needed for this purpose alone. There's wealth in this city sufficient for the purpose, and the Rt. Rev. Bishop has shrewdly chosen the two Astors, and a Vanderbilt, to be among the Board of Trustees.

⁂

Sharp's friends are in a desperate strait. The jurymen already chosen have been approached by outsiders in Sharp's interest. Interesting developments are awaiting exposure and somebody, I fear, will suffer for the crime of embracery. Methinks 'tis difficult to punish the crimes of the millionaire.

WORTH KNOWING

Those who have fed fish to hens claim that the flesh of the fowls and their eggs have a fishy taste.

In vegetable kingdom, improvement is made by grafting and hydridizing; in the animal kingdom by crossing.

No potato is likely to be popular for the market which has deep eyes. Whatever its excellence in other respects, this defect makes it less salable.

The greater the weight an animal can be made to attain in the shortest period of time the smaller the cost per pound proportionately.

A merino sheep will get fat in three months of good feeding. It will not be thick on the rib, for this is not the nature of the merino.

Has your grindstone been hollowed from the grinding of small tools? Grind up the spades and shovels by holding them square across the stone at a proper level. Spades like hoes, should be ground all on one side.

By the evaporating process it has been calculated that one barrel of apples will produce about 15 pounds of evaporated dried apples, and that one pound of these is equal to half a peck of the fruit before it is pared or sliced.

Carry an armful of litter from the barn floor and scatter in the poultry house or in the shed adjoining. Keep fowls picking and scratching and then they will be happy and healthy.

Unclean eggs should be washed and wiped when gathered. The shells are porous, and pungent filth may penetrate and spoil the meat. Eggs for long keeping should not be washed only wiped.

Maine can boast of 56 farmers in its House of Representatives, and the Farmer of the State says they are "the substantial representatives of agricultural interests and have been selected because of their broad intelligence and candid conservatism, which qualify them especially for careful attention to all legislative affairs.

Swindling the Farmers—Stray Cattle.

In Canada, as in most other communities, when a farmer picks up an estray animal, he cares for it, advertises it, and calls upon the owner to prove property, pay charges, and take the animal away. To the ordinary mind this plain transaction seems very straightforward, and to offer but a small opportunity for fraud. But the mind of the swindler is equal to the occasion, and can convert this simple matter of converting an estray, into a swindle upon the farmer who advertises. These swindlers, as usual, hunt in couples. According to the Sarnia (Ont.) "Observer:" "They read the local newspapers carefully, and when a farmer publishes an estray notice, No. 1 calls to look at the animal. The farmer shows the beast, and the fellow decides it is not his; then he returns to his partner and describes it minutely to him. No. 2 goes to the farmer and after proving by a thorough description that he is the owner of the animal, says he cannot take it away, and offers to sell at a bargain. The farmer buys it, and in a few days the rightful owner comes and claims the animal." This is a swindle which may readily take in an honest farmer and it will probably not be confined to this side of the border. Farmers beware how you purchase estrays.—American Agriculturist.

A Difference.

Gov. Thompson tells the following: "It seemed that a new attache to the British legation had just arrived, and, as usual was taken around to be introduced to various heads of departments. Arriving at the treasury department he was introduced to Gov. Thompson. After awhile the conversation turned upon politics, and the British swell asked to be enlightened upon the polical parties in the United States.

"There are but two parties here," said Gov. Thompson, "Democratic and Republican."

"Aw, but er say, dawtchuknaw, there's the mugwumps, dawntchuknaw. Aw, we have heard about the mugwumps in Hingland, dawntchuknaw. What is a mugwump."

"A mugmump!" replied the governor, "Oh, a mugwump, don't you know, is a Republican who votes the Democratic ticket."

"Aw, yaas," replied the swell, "I see; but then, dawntchuknaw, a Democwat who votes the Wepublican ticket must be a Mugwump, too, eh?"

"Oh, no," replied the governor, "he's not a mugwump."

"No? Well, that's verry queah. Now, what is he?"

"Well," replied the governor, with a merry twinkle in his eye, "a Democrat who votes the Republican ticket is called here a damphool."

The rural idea of the manner in which the Astors and Vanderbilts live is amusing, and will doubtless be highly flattering to the persons named. A man traveling "down in Arkansaw" heard two old women talking before a cabin door. One of them, with a clay pipe between her lips, said:

"It do beat all how some folkses has ev'rything a mortal body could ast fer, while others, like you an' me, Mis Peterby, is poorer'n Job's turkey all the born days of our lives. Now, you've heern tell of them Vanderbilts an' Astors there in New York, ain't you?

"Duno but I hev," said "Mis Peterby."

"Well, I've lately heern some things 'bout how they carry on. My man he got it straight from Zimri Perkins, an' Zim he got it from his wife's mother's uncle's novvy, who takes a paper printed in New York, so it must be true."

"I aint a doubt of it,"

"Well, if you'll b'leeve me, old Mis Vanderbilt don't purtend to even wash her own dishes. She don't even make her own bed—her nor Mis Astor neither, and they both sleep in pink velvet night gownds trimmed in lace at $1,000 a yard, and embroidered in diamonts that cost millions on millions."

"The good land!"

"Yes, sir! An' Mis Astor's bed stid is solid gold with diamont knobs on it as big as goose eggs, an' ev'ry time she goes out she has twenty coal black horses hitched to her solid gold charyot, and she stands in it dressed all in white satin with her hair hangin' down her back, athrowin' $20 gold pieces to the beggars."

"Naw!"

"Deed an' its true—ev'ry word of it. And when Mr. and Mis Vanderbilt goes out they have their carriage drawn by forty milk white steeds with a coal black nigger with a diamont ring in his nose, leading ev'ry horse; and Vanderbilt he lays back on his velvet cushions smokin' a pipe that cost a clean billion."

"You don't mean it."

"I do that. Oh, I tell you it's a fine thing to be rich, Mis Peterby; an' I reckon atike as not you an' me'd carry on jest like that if we only had the means to do it with."

"Lake snuff, like snuff anyhow, I know I'd have me a good green an' red gingham gown, an all the salt mack'rel I could eat, fer once."

"An I'd git me some ginyuine Scotch snuff, an' some red glass year bobs, I would."—Tid Bits.

Cost of Living at Washington

Some newspaper writer has recently put forth a statement, in which a nice arithmetical calculation is made, to to show what it costs Mr. Cleveland to live and just how much of his salary he can save. The conclusion is that Mr. Cleveland will retire from the White House $25,000 the richer for each year he stays in it, or that, assuming he has two terms, he will have saved up $200,000 by 1893. Such reasoning is fallacious. The wants and necessities of presidents vary as widely as those of other people. As well attempt to say what it costs a senator or representative to live when you know what his salary is, what the size of his family and the amount he pays for house rent. There is Senator Leland Stanford, for instance. His family consists of two persons and his salary from the government is $5,000 a year. It would be easy to assume that he saves $2,500, but it is stated that his living expenses are really $100,000 a year, and that more than half of this sum is spent in Washington during his winter sojourn there. On the other hand I know of a senator from a southern state who lives comfortably and supports a family of three or four children on $5,000 a year, and saves the rest of his salary for a rainy day. He lives in a modest house on an unfashionable street, buys neither books or pictures, rides in horse cars instead of a carriage and denies himself all the other vanities of the rich. There is another statesman who never brings his family to Washington, and lives at a cost of $8 a week in a boarding house. But these economical ones are the exceptions. A majority of our law makers spend from twice to ten times their salary every year.

Avoid all sudden changes between light and darkness.

Never begin to read, write or sew for several minutes after coming from darkness to light.

Never read by twilight, moonlight or on cloudy days.

Never read or sew directly in front of the light, window or door.

It is best to let the light fall from above obliquely over the left shoulder.

Never sleep so that on awakening the eyes shall open on the light of a window.

Do not use the eyesight by light so scant that it requires an effort to discriminate.

The moment you are instinctively prompted to rub your eyes that moment stop using them.

If the eyelids are glued together on waking up do not forcibly open them, but apply saliva with the finger; it is the speediest dilutant in the world; then wash your eyes and face in warm water.

Can be cured by purifying the blood with

I do not believe that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has an equal as a remedy for Scrofulous Humors. It is pleasant to take, gives strength and vigor to the body, and produces a more permanent, lasting, result than any medicine I ever used.—E. Haines, No. Lindale, O.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease.—W. F. Fowler, M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

For forty years I have suffered with Erysipelas. I have tried all sorts of remedies for my complaint, but found no relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After taking ten bottles of this medicine I am completely cured.—Mary C. Amesbury, Rockport, Me.

I have suffered, for years, from Catarrh, which was so severe that it destroyed my appetite and weakened my system. After trying other remedies, and getting no relief, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, in a few months, was cured.—Susan L. Cook, 909 Albany st., Boston Highlands, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is superior to any blood purifier that I have ever tried. I have taken it for Scrofula, Canker, and Salt-Rheum, and received much benefit from it. It is good, also, for a weak stomach.—Millie Jane Peirce, South Bradford, Mass.

Use after each meal Scott's Emulsion; it is as palatable as milk and easily digested. Delicate people improve rapidly with its use. For Consumption, Throat affections and Bronchitis it is unequalled. It has been computed that the death rate of the globe is 67 a minute, 97,790 a day, 35,639,835 a year, and the birth 70 a minute, 100,800 a day, and 36,792,000 a year.

THREE Effects.—The thousands of remarkable cures which have been accomplished by Hood's Sarsaparilla are due simply to three effects which this great medicine has on those who take it:

First. It purifies the blood.

Second. It strengthens the system.

Third. It gives healthy action to the digestive organs.

With these three effects no disease can long retain its hold. It is forced to leave the system giving place to health and strength, through the potent influence of Hood's Sarsaparilla. Sold by all druggists.

Maine can boast of 56 farmers in its House of Representatives, and the Farmer of the State says they are "the substantial representatives of agricultural interests and have been selected because of their broad intelligence and candid conservatism, which qualify them especially for careful attention to all legislative affairs.

Swindling the Farmers—Stray Cattle.

In Canada, as in most other communities, when a farmer picks up an estray animal, he cares for it, advertises it, and calls upon the owner to prove property, pay charges, and take the animal away. To the ordinary mind this plain transaction seems very straightforward, and to offer but a small opportunity for fraud. But the mind of the swindler is equal to the occasion, and can convert this simple matter of converting an estray, into a swindle upon the farmer who advertises. These swindlers, as usual, hunt in couples. According to the Sarnia (Ont.) "Observer:" "They read the local newspapers carefully, and when a farmer publishes an estray notice, No. 1 calls to look at the animal. The farmer shows the beast, and the fellow decides it is not his; then he returns to his partner and describes it minutely to him. No. 2 goes to the farmer and after proving by a thorough description that he is the owner of the animal, says he cannot take it away, and offers to sell at a bargain. The farmer buys it, and in a few days the rightful owner comes and claims the animal." This is a swindle which may readily take in an honest farmer and it will probably not be confined to this side of the border. Farmers beware how you purchase estrays.—American Agriculturist.

A Difference.

Gov. Thompson tells the following: "It seemed that a new attache to the British legation had just arrived, and, as usual was taken around to be introduced to various heads of departments. Arriving at the treasury department he was introduced to Gov. Thompson. After awhile the conversation turned upon politics, and the British swell asked to be enlightened upon the polical parties in the United States.

"There are but two parties here," said Gov. Thompson, "Democratic and Republican."

"Aw, but er say, dawtchuknaw, there's the mugwumps, dawntchuknaw. Aw, we have heard about the mugwumps in Hingland, dawntchuknaw. What is a mugwump."

"A mugmump!" replied the governor, "Oh, a mugwump, don't you know, is a Republican who votes the Democratic ticket."

"Aw, yaas," replied the swell, "I see; but then, dawntchuknaw, a Demoowat who votes the Wepublican ticket must be a Mugwump, too, eh?"

"Oh, no," replied the governor, "he's not a mugwump."

"No? Well, that's verry queah. Now, what is he?"

"Well," replied the governor, with a merry twinkle in his eye, "a Democrat who votes the Republican ticket is called here a damphool."

"It do beat all how some folkses has ev'rything a mortal body could ast fer, while others, like you an' me, Mis Peterby, is poorer'n Job's turkey all the born days of our lives. Now, you've heern tell of them Vanderbilts an' Astors there in New York, ain't you?

"Duno but I hev," said "Mis Peterby."

"Well, I've lately heern some things 'bout how they carry on. My man he got it straight from Zimri Perkins, an' Zim he got it from his wife's mother's uncle's nevvy, who takes a paper printed in New York, so it must be true."

"I aint a doubt of it,"

"Well, if you'll b'leeve me, old Mis Vanderbilt don't purtend to even wash her own dishes. She don't even make her own bed—her nor Mis Astor neither, and they both sleep in pink velvet night gownds trimmed in lace at $1,000 a yard, and embroidered in diaments that cost millions on millions."

"The good land!"

"Yes, sir! "Deed an' its true—ev'ry word of it. And when Mr. and Mis Vanderbilt goes out they have their carriage drawn by forty milk white steeds with a coal black nigger with a diament ring in his nose, leading ev'ry horse; and Vanderbilt he lays back on his velvet cushions smokin' a pipe that cost a clean billion."

"You don't mean it."

"I do that. Oh, I tell you it's a fine thing to be rich, Mis Peterby; an' I reckon alike as not you an' me'd carry on jest like that if we only had the means to do it with."

Cost of Living at Washington.

Some newspaper writer has recently put forth a statement, in which a nice arithmetical calculation is made, to to show what it costs Mr. Cleveland to live and just how much of his salary he can save. The conclusion is that Mr. Cleveland will retire from the White House $25,000 the richer for each year he stays in it, or that, assuming he has two terms, he will have saved up $200,000 by 1893. Such resoning is fallacious. The wants and necessities of presidents vary as widely as those of other people. As well attempt to say what it costs a senator or representative to live when you know what his salary is, what the size of his family and the amount he pays for house rent. There is Senator Leland Stanford, for instance. His family consists of two persons and his salary from the government is $5,000 a year. It would be easy to assume that he saves $2,500, but it is stated that his living expenses are really $100,000 a year, and that more than half of this sum is spent in Washington during his winter sojourn there. On the other hand I know of a senator from a southern state who lives comfortably and supports a family of three or four children on $3,000 a year, and saves the rest of his salary for a rainy day. He lives in a modest house on an unfashionable street, buys neither books nor pictures, rides in horse cars instead of a carriage and denies himself all the other vanities of the rich. There is another statesman who never brings his family to Washington, and lives at a cost of $8 a week in a boarding house. But these economical ones are the exceptions. A majority of our law makers spend from twice to ten times their salary every year.

Care of the Eyes.

Keep a shade on your lamp or gas burner.

Avoid all sudden changes between light and darkness.

Never begin to read, write or sew for several minutes after coming from darkness to light.

Never read by twilight, moonlight or on cloudy days.

Never read or sew directly in front of the light, window or door.

It is best to let the light fall from above obliquely over the left shoulder.

Never sleep so that on awakening the eyes shall open on the light of a window.

Do not use the eyesight by light so scant that it requires an effort to discriminate.

The moment you are instinctively prompted to rub your eyes that moment stop using them.

If the eyelids are glued together on waking up do not forcibly open them, but apply saliva with the finger; it is the speediest dilutant in the world; then wash your eyes and face in warm water.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is superior to any blood purifier that I have ever tried. I have taken it for Scrofula, Canker, and Salt-Rheum, and received much benefit from it. It is good, also, for a weak stomach.—Millie Jane Peirce, South Bradford, Mass.

Ballad of the Romantic Young Man.

The forest where wood-thrushes trill
  The sunny long summer days through,
The bands of the murmuring rill
  That gleams with clear opals of dew,
  The blossoms of white and of blue,
The thickets once haunted by Pan,
  He dotes on with tenderness true—
He's such a romantic young man.

No laugh of the scorner can chill
  His love for the somber of hue;
The cells of his brain will be fill
  With rhymes about ages they knew—
  The warriors who jousted and slew
Their foes in the field as they ran,
  And quote them to Sallie and Sue,
He's such a romantic young man.

O'er many a far foreign hill
  He's roamed like the "Wandering Jew,"
And those who have envied his skill
  In singing have not been a few;
  The pictures he has upon view
Are for the esthetic to scan;
  He can waltz "like a dream," he can woo,
He's such a romantic young man.

ENVOY.

Maids, be this a warning to you!
  He's poor, and I know it's his plan
To marry a million or two,
  He's such a romantic young man.

—Clinton Scollard in Detroit Free Press.

A STRANGE REVENGE.

Howard Snow was only 23 and Helen Thomas 30—one of those women who ripen like a peach in the sun and to whom mature years add only richer charms.

It was the old story of a young man's infatuation for a woman older than himself. It blinded his judgment and blunted his sense of right and wrong, and made him conscious of but one desire of life—to be free. His bonds to Barbara Walker grew hateful, and she seemed to him a child whose weakness would be a drag upon him always.

So he freed himself and for a month was happy with a drunkard's happiness. Then his better nature awoke with a sudden shock. He spoke of marriage to Helen Thomas, and she laughed in his face.

"Marriage!" she said "why you are only a boy! How can you think of so absurb a thing?"

And her laughter had the ring of scorn in it.

Then he went his way.

He thought of Barbara Walker with a strange tenderness, but with no idea of consulting her with any attempt at renewal of old ties. He felt no love for her, in truth, only he felt his baseness and lack of stability.

He applied himself to his profession and made a success of it. He grew rich, prosperous, popular with men, but feared by women, for his sarcasm was always two-edged. Yet marriageable women sought after him, for he had personal attractions added to his wealth and influence, and seemed a desirable husband for an ambitious woman.

But he reached the age of 32 and was still free. And then he met Barbara Walker again.

Through all these years he had lost trace of her and knew nothing of her. Now they met suddenly, and to him at least, unexpectedly, at a formal dinner party given by a prominent politician.

Howard Snow was presented to Miss Walker by the hostess and requested to lead her to dinner. It was Barbara Walker! The was no mistaking the face and form he so well remembered, and yet what a change!

The nine years had but perfected the the girlish graces that were pleasing of old and lent the charm of dignity and elegence to what was once only sweetness and simplicity. The shy, modest manner had given place to perfect self-possession and rare conversational powers rendered her the star of the evening.

Howard Snow scarcely left her side all the evening. She charmed him with her descriptions of scenery and chit-chat of foreign life.

"I would be glad to call," he said, "where can I find you?"

"In the house where we first met," she said, as they parted. Where can I find you?"

"In the house where we first met," she said, glancing up at him with the old, shy look. "I am visiting the same friends."

He could not have described his sensations as he rang the bell the next day and was ushered into the presence of that queenly woman who was once his betrothed wife. Admiration, reverence, respect and it seemed to him, love, stirred together in his heart.

It was only one of many calls. She was so kind, so cordial, so entertaining. Her soul was to large to treasure any resentment against him for his old wrong. Then by and by he grew to realize how he was loving this woman. Not the old love awakened but a new love created—the one grand passion of his life. Still he hesitated, not daring to speak. But so strong grew the emotion that it overpowered him at length.

"God knows I feel my unworthiness," he said, "but I love you Barbara, and want you for my wife. I said these same words to you ten years ago and failed you. I was only a weak boy then, swayed about by a designing woman. Now I am a man, knowing by own heart, with all its intense pent up passion it cries out for you."

For a moment Barbara's face seemed glorified with light. Her cheeks glowed, her eyes enlarged, her breast heaved. She put both hands in his.

"I have never been content without you—no for one moment," she said. "Nothing filled my life so full that I did not feel the need of you, Howard."

Their marriage was set for three months later. And they were to be married in the village church by the old family rector. The little church [illegible] for worse, in sickness and in health, through good report and evil report, till death do part?"

The old rector waited for the response. It came like the report of a pistol.

"Never! As he once rejected me, so now do I reject him."

And she swept down the aisle, whiter than her robes, and left a palsied crowd of people staring blankly after her.

Very calmly and very cooly Howard Snow passed down and out the church. Before midnight he was in raving delirium. The next morning they found him in a high fever, calling wildly on the name of Barbara, and cursing some woman he called Helen, who seemed pursuing him.

"He cannot live the doctor said the next evening. "Will some one go and ask the woman who has done this cruel deed to come here for a moment? The sight of her may quiet him perhaps."

But while he spoke she came in, her bridal white exchanged for funeral black, her long hair falling loose about her. She glided to the bedside and put her hands on his face.

"Howard she called in a trembling voice, oh, my love Howard, forgive me ere you die."

But he fancied she was the woman Helen, and shrieked and cursed her, and grew so violent they sent her from the room.

There was a week of wild delirium and then a week of stupor, and then—"He is dead!" they said, and the word passed to her. Like a pale wraith of here former self, she came slowly in and knelt beside him. She put her wasted cheek beside his on the pillow and the tears that had refused to rise fell slowly down, as she said:

"Oh, I thought revenge was sweet, but it is bitter, bitter my love."

How long she knelt there she did not know, but suddenly she was startled by a sigh—a very ghost of a sigh it seemed to her. She put her hand over the heart she believed she had stilled forever. It fluttered feebly.

"Oh, thank God!" she cried and fell unconscious.

An hour later she found herself in bed and kindly cared for, and smiling faces all about her.

"He lives," they said. "Your touch brought him back from the very shores of death."

A few weeks later a pallid bride and a still more pallid groom passed down the old church-aisle and out into the great world.

IT WILL BE ALL LIGHT THERE.

A Pathetic Story of Home Life That Has Sadness in Every Line.

Children are happy counselors. They are to our hard, practical, everyday lives what the stars are to the heavens, or the flowers and birds to the earth.

There is a family in this city who are dependent this moment upon a little child for all the present sunshine of their lives.

A few weeks ago the young wife and mother was stricken down to die.

It was so sudden, so dreadful when the grave family physician called them together in the parlor, and in his solemn professional way intimated to them the truth—there was no hope!

Then the question arose among them, who would tell her?

Not the doctor! It would be cruel to to let the man of science go to their dear one on such an errand.

Not the aged mother who would be left childless and alone.

Nor the young husband, who was walking the floor with clinched hands and rebellious heart.

Not—there was only one other, and at this moment he looked up from the book he had been playing with, unnoticed by them all and asked gravely:

"Is my mamma doin' to die?"

Then, without waiting for an answer, he sped from the room and upstairs as fast as his little feet would carry him.

Friends and neighbors were watching by the sick woman. They wonderingly noticed the pale face of the child as he climbed on the bed and laid his small head on his mother's pillow.

"Mamma," he asked in sweet, caressing tones, "is you 'fraid to die?"

The mother looked at him with swift intelligence. Perhaps she had been thinking of this.

"Who—told—you—Charlie?" she asked faintly.

"Doctor an' papa an gramma—everybody, he whispered. "Mamma, dear little mamma, doan' be 'fraid to die, 'ill you?"

"No, Charlie," said the young mother, after one supreme pang of grief; "no, mamma won't be afraid."

"Jus' shut your eyes in 'e dark, mamma, teep hold my hand, an' when you open 'em, mamma, it'll be all light there."

When the family gathered awe-stricken at the bedside Charlie held up his little hand.

"H-u-s-h! My mamma doan to sleep. Her won't wake up here any more."

And so it proved. There was no heart-rending farewell, no agony of parting, for when the young mother woke she had passed beyond, and as baby Charlie said, "It was all light there."—Detroit Free Press.

A Funny Mistake.

"Is this the place to get a license?" asked a timid young man of Officer Spencer in the collector's office yesterday.

"Yes; right at that window. You'll have to wait your turn."

The youth got into line and in the course of half an hour reached the window.

"What's your name and residence?" asked the busy clerk.

"E. Walters, 958 Clybourn avenue."

"Well, here you are—$2, please."

The young man paid the money, seized the paper, and hastened from the room. Officer Spencer, noticing the glad light in his eyes as he passed, remarked to himself: "That young feller must have a valuable animal. I'll bet it 'ud break his heart if it ate some pizzened meat."

As soon as he reached the corridor, Walters pulled out his license to look at it.

"Holy smoke! What's this? Dog! Marry a dog! By George! What will Annie say?"

He was paralyzed. He stood as if dazed for some moments, uncertain what to do. Finally he sheepishly went back to Officer Spencer, who, when he heard the young man's explanation, interceded for him, got his $2 back, and directed him to the hymeneal window in the county clerk's office, where he succeeded in getting the proper license. As he walked away he could not help smiling to himself.—Chicago News.

LEONIDAS AND THE PASS.

How He Tried to Hold it at Thermopylæ Some Years Ago.

Leonidas was a prominent editor of Sparta in the sweet long ago.

His paper, the Palladium, was noted for its opposition to the interstate-commerce of that period, and when the obnoxious measure became a law Leonidas was as hot as a cook stove.

Like the law which is now distracting the minds of the people of the United States and overworking the commissioners, this ancient statute prohibited the issue of passes.

Just before the law began to do its deadly work Mr. Xerxes, president of the Thermopylæ railway company, issued a circular, of which the following is a copy:

"[Form 291.] 2-14-2,000

"THERMOPYLÆ RAILWAY CO.—OFFICE OF COL. W. H. YERXES, President, LOCRIS, April 27, 480 B. C.—Dear Sir: As you are aware the interstate-commerce law which goes into effect on the 5th prox., forbids under severe penalties the issuing of free passes or the honoring of those now issued.

"You will, therefore, return to the general offices of the Thermopylæ railway company the annual pass now issued in your name, as the same will not be available for passage after the date named.

"Regretting the necessity for issuing this circular, I beg to remain, yours faithfully, WILLIAM HENRY XERXES.

"President and General Freight and Ticket Agent."

When Leonidas received this intimation he was even more wroth than when the bill was passed.

The pass was a young and beautiful one, with the figures 480 in large gilt letters all over the face, and Leonidas had not exhibited it more than three times to the admiring gaze of the conductors of the line.

Then, again, the fishing season was about to open and he intended to take a run down into Thessaly county every Saturday night after the paper had gone to press and indulge in the pleasant sport of drowning worms.

He had several other little excursions planned for the summer, one of which was to visit his girl in Ohio.

Leonidas was therefore sorrowful when he learned that this nice new pass which was just ready to blossom forth into a career of usefulness, had been cut down in its fresh young beauty.

Then he made a brave resolution.

He resolved not to give it up, but die in its defense if necessary.

He died as the sequel will show.

Col Xerxes was determined to see the law enforced, and when Leonidas neglected to return the pass at the appointed time, Xerxes sent a postal card to inquire the wherefore.

Leonidas replied that Xerxes might go to Halifax, but Xerxes went not.

Halifax was not on his line of road.

He went for Leonidas instead, having first called out the militia to assist in taking the pass from the angry editor.

The latter levied 300 Pinkerton guards armed with Remington rifles, to defend the pass.

But it was of no use.

Xerxes captured the precious pasteboard, but not until Leonidas and all his retainers but one had been sent to that land where the wicked legislators cease from troubling and the weary editor is at rest.

The man who escaped got back to Sparta and wrote an account of the fight for the Palladium which thus had a scoop on its contemporaries.

This little incident shows that there is nothing alarmingly original about the interstate-commerce law, for passes were called in more than 2,000 years ago.—William H. Siviter in Texas Siftings.

Seth Green's Method of Fishing.

"You want me to tell you," said Mr. Green to a Rochester reporter, "how it is that I always fill my basket with shiners, and you chaps have to make a visit to the fish market on your way home, or get laughed at? Well, get out your pencil and write as I talk and I will tell you.

"In the first place, when I go fishing I go fishing. I don't hear the babble of the brook. I don't hear the fluttering of the bird, nor the silvery leaves, nor the beautiful sky. Neither do I fish anybody else's line. I fish my own and I don't watch my companion, if I have one, to see when he gets a bite. I don't care whether he gets a bite or not. I am attending to my own business and looking for a good place to cats. I am looking for the fly that is on the water, and to see if there is a rise. If I see one, no matter if it is ten rods away, I mark the place and make for it. I don't run, but I go quietly along, and keep fishing and when I get within casting distance, I drop my fly a little short, and if I don't get a rise, the next cast is made exactly on the spot on which the fly lit. My fly does not go with a thud as though I wanted to hit the bull's-eye, but it touches the water as lightly as a fond mother's hand touches the brow of a lovely coaxing child that she loves better than I can find words to express. I am just as sure of a rise, too, as the fond mother is that the child will roll its loving eyes up to her face, with an expression which says to her, 'I am yours.' I feel when my fly drops so gently on the water that it does not make a ripple, that the fish is mine.

"That is the secret of fishing."

A WORD WITH YOU.

BANGOR, MAINE, Spring, 1887.

Preparatory to what follows, we will say that realizing the great work of healing upon which we have entered, that nothing may be set down to quackery or ignorance, we have prepared a short history of the professional life of W. H. BROWN, M. D., from whose formula we have for years prepared the most successful medicine for purifying and enriching the blood, including the torpid liver, and strengthening weak kidneys, —in short, for the speedy, safe and permanent cure of all diseases of the stomach, liver, and kidneys, that has ever been known in New England. This history, together with statements from many prominent people whom you will know, of relief secured and cures effected from sufferings and torture by these diseases, will be mailed to you if you send us your address. Better that in this letter we tell you where relief can be found. We have come late to the work with BROWN'S SARSAPARILLA. Naturally we have taken hold of the cases which other remedies, altho' advertised with persistency and at marvelous expense, have failed to cure. The results have been wonderful. Nowhere have we failed to give relief, and in no case where persistent and faithful use according to directions has been made of Brown's Sarsaparilla, has it failed to CURE any or all diseases of the blood, stomach, liver, and kidneys. Mrs. Ephraim Cunningham of East Bangor, Maine, heard of it, read of it, tried it, and was cured of her weakness in kidneys and troubled liver. Carlton P. Williams of Amesbury, Mass., says he is entirely cured of what physicians diagnosticated as Bright's disease, and pronounced incurable. Eben Morrison of Cleveland, Ohio, advised by a friend to use Brown's Sarsaparilly for his kidney troubles, did so and was cured. Benj. Hill of New York Corner, at 63 years of age, gained strength and vitality for his blood, and health to continue his daily duties. Tumors dispursed for Reuben Severance and Aaron French by Brown's Sarsaparilla. Scrofula cured in Hartley B. Fisher, Corinna, Me. But why continue? Get our book on good health and read for yourself the astounding results secured by the use of Brown's Sarsaparilla, and remember these cases are those where eminent physicians have failed to find a remedy, and other medicines, advertise well and popularly introduced, have not benefitted, but Brown's Sarsaparilla, having been taken as a last resort, has proved efficacious and no other treatment was needed. Now with these facts in evidence, substantiated by reputable citizens accompanied by affidavits of prominent people, why not make this remedy the first, as it will then prove to you the only resort when you, your family or your neighbors are suffering from any of the almost numberless disorders which arise from a deranged stomach, and inactive liver, or weakened kidneys? Now a word in regard to the preparation and combination of this wonderful remedy. Our Mr. Warren for many years enjoyed the confidence of the late W. H. Brown, M. D., and in the prosecution of his business of pharmacist hundreds of times has he been called upon to put up the prescription, which is now compounded for popular sale, and for a few years has been known to the public as Brown's Sarsaparilla. It is entirely vegetable in its combination; the most powerful alterative-tonic properties known to the materia medica being skillfully prepared on a scientific basis, and the result of a perfect medicine for the relief and cure of dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation, billiousness, loss of appetite, inflammation of kidneys and bladder, Bright's disease, dropsy, gravel, jaundice, heartburn, rheumatism, neuralgia, scrofula, erysipelas, salt rheum, diabetes; for the removal of impurities of the blood; to incite to proper activity the sluggish torpid liver; and to strengthen and relieve disorders of the stomach. It also acts like a charm as a remedy for all female complaints. Brown's Sarsaparilla has such curative powers and is of such immeasurable value to sufferers that we have decided to commence the publication of a series of extensive articles, detailing its properties uses and cures; and hereafter you can receive such information from the columns of this paper. You can obtain the medicine of any dealer. Yours truly,

JAS. R. FAIRGRIEVE - EDITOR

On yesterday a statue was unveiled at Hartford, Conn., of Nathan Hale the young patriot, who was hanged as a spy in the Revolution. His last words expressing the regret taat he had only one life to give for his country and his tragic end will always stand out in bold relief in history..

An associate press dispatch announces that Dan Rice the showman married Mrs. Robinson, a rich widow, at Schulerburg, Texas, last week. The veteran is 78 and his wife 45. This will doubtless infuse new life and ambition into Mr. Rice and probably "the greatest show on earth" will soon be on the road, and old chestnuts re-opened, baked over and cracked by the old clown.

The Patriot man thought he was in clover last week. "He thought he had us on the hip." Why? Because we said Newark has a much less number of miles of mains than Fulton, and Cortland less miles of mains. And so the Patriot went for us with another column article and with telegrams from Newark and Cortland. Because he reckoned he had found us at fault for the first time. Now what are the facts. We have a copy of the water contract of the village of Newark. It calls for seventy hydrants and seven miles of street mains at the annual rental of $2,000 for 5 years. But, Newark has not yet got her water works, and we are informed by this morning's mail that no move has yet been made towards construction. In Cortland there are to be 150 hydrants and some 14 miles of mains at a rental of $4,000 so we were mistaken in saying Fulton had more miles of mains than those villages. Fulton is nearly as large as Cortland and larger than Newark and yet Newark, if she gets Water Works is to pay $300 per year more than Fulton paid and Cortland $2,300 per year more.

We made some statements in last week's Times about the three fires since January 1st which everybody who was at the the fires knows to be true, but the Patriot still laboring under the delusion of the stranger, Cobb, comes out in a column article to say, it was not so. But regardless of what the Patriot says, the people who were there and looked and saw, know that some ten minutes were lost at the Dilts fire that might have been saved by hitching to the hydrant, and that the building could have been saved. The Patriot states that it is doubtful if there was and is pressure enough on Fourth street hydrants to throw a stream on any of the buildings. Such a statement is absurd. It is well known by tests made by the hose boys that there is not a hydrant on Fourth street but what will throw a stream over any building on Fourth street except the Seminary and School building at any time under tank pressure and if the editor of the Patriot or any other citizen has any doubt about it they had better get the hose boys to go there and give them a test. The same editor cries in a loud voice because Draper's store was burned and the hydrants were used. Yes, and every man, woman and child knows that it was an old tinder box, fairly ablaze when discovered afire and beyond recovery when the hose carts arrived, and further that it was due to the Water Works, that the Patriot and the Stephens building were saved. And had it not been for the invaluable aid of the water hydrants we might have suffered a serious conflagration.

But another bad feature of his article is his statement that there was no pressure at Nelson's building on Second street or at Bristol's barn. Now the editor knows that the pressure was all right but what was the trouble. There was tank pressure on the hydrants. Two lines of hose were run to and hitched on one hydrant and of necessity took nearly all the pressure away. If one line of hose had been hitched to the hydrant, it would have thrown a stream over any of the buildings. It was and is thoroughly understood that under tank pressure only one line of hose should be fastened to a hydrant and two under pump pressure. It is well known that two streams from one hydrant under low pressure will almost destroy the throwing capacity, in other words, the demand for water almost equals the supply, but increase this pressure or use only one line of hose and one nozzle and the supply exceeds the demand and hence the power to throw distance. But here is [illegible] argument. By the burning of the Dilts shop and Highriter block, other buildings were erected and labor employed in the construction. By [illegible] property is actually destroyed and [illegible] wealth is reduced by as much [illegible] destroyed. So the argument of the [illegible] total destruction is [illegible] would advise the [illegible] build [illegible]

The Great Tortilita Mines.

Ex-Governor Rodman M. Price, of New Jersey, the California pioneer for whom the Legislature of that State recently appropriated $50,000 to erect a monument in recognition of his public services, is in town. As a lieutenant of the Navy, Governor Price took possession of California in the name of the United States. He has long been identified with the interests of the Pacific slope. Asked his opinion of the Tortilita Mines in Arizona, whose offices are at 57 Broadway, this city, and whose shares are about to be listed, and are attracting much attention, Governor Price said: "I am familiar with the country in which the Tortilitas are located. They are in the central and best part of the territory and in an enormously rich mining district. The company has twelve mines and owns a territory three miles long, with over 250 acres of rich ore deposits. The Tortilitas have already produced over $150,000 in bullion. I expect to see a second Virginia City established there and another Comstock in the results of the mines. The value of the Tortilitas is demonstrated by the concentration of the ore below the water level in the two mines which are now being worked, which is the absolute test of permanency. They have a vein of ore already exposed 42½ feet wide that assays $50 per ton, and the supply is inexhastible. "Am I acquainted with the management?" Yes. It is composed of reliable, competent business men of the highest standing. The president is Mr. Joseph H. Reall, president of the American Agricultural and Dairy Association, with whom I was for many months identified in the passage of the National Oleomargarine Law, and the vice-president is General J. Floyd King, of Louisiana, a distinguished officer in the late war, and for nine sessions, eight years, a member of Congress. The superintendent of the mines, D. T. Elmore, upon whom much devolves, is indorsed by Senator Sawyer, of Wisconsin, as one of the best mining men in America, and of absolute integrity and capacity. There is a great future for this enterprise in my judgement. I regard the Tortilitas as one of the best properties ever placed on the New York market and experienced operators and mining men coincide in in my opinion; I foresee great activity in mining stocks this summer.—N. Y. Tribune, May 28.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O.: Have taken Hall's Catarrh Cure; am 48 years old. Had asthma 19 years, and a dreadful cough; for five years. Have taken everything, went to the Hot Springs; have doctored with the doctors here; I have done nothing but take medicine for 19 years. When I commenced taking Hall's Catarrh Cure I was almost dead. I sent for the doctor the day I got Hall's Catarrh Cure, and I told him that I would die anyway and that I would try your medicine. I was very bad. How I suffered for 9 years! I could hardly breathe at times. I saw Hall's Catarrh Cure advertised in the papers and commenced taking it, I would have been under the ground to-day if it had not been for that. I have not had one bad spell of coughing since. In breathing my head feels well and I am well. It has done me a thousand dollars worth of good. There are ten of my friends, on seeing what it had done for me, taking it, and it is helping them. I only wish that everyone who has catarrh, asthma and a bad cough could see me, so that I could tell them all to take it. All that know me here know how I have suffered. (I have been here since 1858,) and say to me that "I am so glad you found something that could cure you." Everyone said, "how much better you look." The doctors say they are glad I found Hall's Ctaarrh Cure as the could not cure me.

I cannot express my gratitude to you for the good Hall's Catarrh Cure has done me. You can use as much of this letter as will do the afflicted good. Publish to the whole world—it is all true and they should know it.
